Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the additional resources allocated to the National Health Service in the statement will be distributed to the regions in accordance with the resource allocation working party equalisation principles.

Mr. Newton: The Government remain committed to the principle of improving equity of access to services, and will continue to determine regions' main revenue and capital allocations in accordance with this principle. This will, as ever, involve judgments about the appropriate pace of change.

There will be separate arrangements for allocating the two new special funds: £50 million over two years for projects to tackle waiting lists and times, and £30 million over two years to help tackle transitional problems in regions receiving less than national average growth.

Pharmacies

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if all persons providing pharmaceutical services and listed according to the provisions of section 42 of the National Health Service Act 1977 will continue to be able to dispense National Health Service prescriptions under the regulations he plans to make under section 3 of the National Health Service (Amendment) Act 1986; if any applications for listings made prior to the coming into force of section 3 of the 1986 Act will be dealt with under the provisions of the 1977 Act; and if any financial arrangements he makes for the voluntary removal of a person's name from the list will apply to all persons listed at the time that section 3 of the 1986 Act comes into force.

Mr. Newton: Changes introduced by the new arrangements for allocating National Health Service pharmacy contracts will not affect current contract holders unless they decide to relocate their business. Applications made before the new arrangements come into force will be considered under the present arrangements. Final decisions have not yet been taken on the details of the arrangements for payments to those who wish to withdraw from their NHS contract but only a minority of current contract holders will be eligible.

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has recived from the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee of the number of pharmacies which are expected to claim compensation for the surrender of their right to dispense National Health Service prescriptions.

Mr. Newton: No such estimate has been received.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the extent to which National Health Service hospital pharmacies are recommending the use of local pharmacies.

Mr. Newton: Guidance from the Department has set out for health authorities the limited circumstances in which they may transfer dispensing from hospital pharmacies to community pharmacies.

We do not hold records of the circumstances in which individual transfers are made.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for social Services if he will make a statement on staffing levels in National Health Service hospital pharmacies.

Mr. Newton: It is a matter for health authorities to determine the appropriate staffing level in their hospital pharmacies.

We expect that the difficulties which were experienced in recruiting and retaining pharmacists in the National Health Service will have been ameliorated by the pay increases which have recently been implemented.

I understand that the hospital pharmacists grading structure is currently under consideration by the pharmaceutical Whitley council.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the present numbers of people awaiting hospital treatment in the Wandsworth health authority area; and to what treatment the lists relate.

Mr. Newton: A bound volume of the hospital in-patient waiting lists for each health authority in England at 31 March 1986, the latest date for which figures are available centrally, has been placed in the Library. Waiting list information is available centrally by the consultant's specialty and not according to the intended method of treatment.

Health Services

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the amount of money to be allocated to the Wandsworth health authority for the recently announced extra funding to be made by his Department to London health services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The special fund of £30 million over two years has been established to help ease the transitional problems which some districts in regions receiving less than national growth may face. My right hon. Friend hopes to announce details of allocations from the fund to regions shortly, and to give guidance on how the fund is to be used.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to raise the long-term growth assumption for the hospital and community health services in England from the current ½ per cent. figure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Long-term resource assumptions are intended to provide a broad framework for regions' ten year strategic plans.

When the existing assumptions were issued in 1983 (HC(83)12) it was made clear to health authorities that the level of resources available for health services in the future would depend on the success of the national economy and on competing demands for resources, and could not be predicted with any certainty. The position would be reviewed in the public expenditure survey. Health authorities were therefore asked to ensure that their long-term plans were flexible enough to cope with levels of resources below the long-term assumption and to make good use of any extra resources which could be made available. Authorities were also asked to continue to release further resources through increased efficiency for improvements and new developments.

The long-term assumptions do not therefore require fine tuning year by year, and we would not expect to revise them until guidelines are issued for the next strategic planning round.

Prescriptions

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider the introduction of additional methods whereby prescriptions designated as in need of urgent dispensing can be made available to the individual concerned.

Mr. Newton: Yes, if the hon. Member would care to write to me with a specific suggestion to make which could be considered in connection with the current review of primary care.

Condoms

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about regional variations in the availability of condoms (i) free and (ii) on prescription under the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Department's guidance to health authorities on family planning services advises that all forms of contraceptive appliances should be available at family planning clinics. There is no charge for the supplies which are prescribed and dispensed through this service, although a charge may be made for condoms supplied by clinics without prescription. There are over 1,700 family planning clinics throughout the country and I am not aware that the Department's guidelines are not being followed. Condoms are not supplied under the National Health Service on prescription by a general practitioner.

Departmental Staff (Attacks)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the number of reported attacks on his Department's or National Health Service staff in Batley and Spen in 1985 and in 1986 so far.

Mr. Lyell: The Department's Dewsbury social security local office serves an area which includes the Batley and Spen constituency. It has reported only one case of violence to staff in 1985 and none so far in 1986, for this area. Information about violence to staff in the National Health Service is not held centrally.

Mr. A. A. Marklew (Pension Entitlement)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will instruct his Department's central pensions branch, Newcastle upon Tyne to explain the reasons why the insurance contributions made by Mr. A. A. Marklew of 30 Moss Green, Fernwood, Rugeley, Staffordshire, prior to 5 July 1948 have not been taken into account in assessing his pension entitlement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: Following investigation, the insurance contributions paid by my hon. Friend's constituent prior to 5 July 1948 have now been taken into account in assessing his pension entitlement. I am writing to my hon. Friend concerning the details.

Abortions

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown by regional health authority of the total number of abortions performed in England and Wales under the Abortion Act 1967; and, in each region, how many of these abortions were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Newton: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, figures which are more readily available are shown in the table.

Number of notifications of legal abortions by area of termination—Total all abortions to resident women, number with grounds 5[1] 1979-85

[1] In emergency to save the life of the pregnant woman.
Figures exclude, for 1979 and 1980, abortions performed in post graduate teaching hospitals which were not assigned to a Regional Health Authority (RHA)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of abortions that have so far been performed in the United Kingdom under the Abortion Act 1967; how many of these abortions were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother; and what percentage this latter figure represents of the former.

Mr. Newton: The total number of notifications of legal abortions, to resident and non-resident women, carried out under the Abortion Act 1967, from 27 April 1968 to 31 December 1985 in England and Wales, and Scotland is 2,589,110. Of these, 136 were notified as having been performed in emergency to save the life of the pregnant woman, which represents 0·005 per cent. of all abortions.

A further 86,468 notifications were made in respect of England and Wales alone from 1 January to 30 June 1986, of which one was notified as having been performed in emergency to save the life of the pregnant woman.

The Abortion Act does not apply to Northern Ireland.

Public Health Laboratory Service

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what reductions in expenditure have been planned for the public health laboratory service in 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: There have been no reductions in the overall allocation by the Department to the public health laboratory services board for 1986-87, and no reduction is planned for 1987-88.

Criminal Injuries (Brain Damage)

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will consider special medical provision for those victims of crimes who have sustained brain damage.

Mrs. Currie: It has always been a principle of the National Health Service that patients are treated according to their medical needs rather than the way in which their illness or injury has arisen. It would not be in the best interests of the patients concerned to abandon this principle.

Babies (Sex Selection)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what National Health Service funds are devoted to research into the selection of sex of babies by their parents; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We are not aware that any National Health Service Funds have been devoted to such research.

NHS (Industry Competitiveness)

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made by the group set up to consider further improvements in National Health Service support of industry competitiveness.

Mrs. Currie: As part of the responsibilities for National Health Service procurement matters which my noble Friend has recently assumed, she now chairs the group to which my hon. Friend refers. On the advice of the group, whose establishment was reported on 25 March at columns 459-60, the NHS procurement directorate has proposed an action programme to help ensure that the NHS can continue to look to a strong internationally competitive United Kingdom industry in the future. With the approval of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services and the support of all regional health authorities, an extensive range of actions is now being implemented in all National Health Service regions. As part of these actions:

top NHS management in all regions will put its weight behind, and initiate new, efforts to raise awareness of staff at all levels on how important a strong United Kingdom industrial base is for the economy and hence for the financing of the NHS. The intention to look for ways of enhancing the competitiveness of industry consistent with value for money will be written into authorities' organisational aims and management plans; steps will be taken by NHS authorities to broaden competition in NHS supplies by ensuring that all possible United Kingdom suppliers are asked to bid for contracts;

NHS authorities will seek to improve their dialogue with suppliers on needs, problems and ways of overcoming them. Further guidance to be developed by the NHS procurement directorate on de-briefing of unsuccessful tenderers and other aspects of the Government's public purchasing policy will assist in this; information for decision-makers will be improved to help ensure better NHS equipment replacement programmes and option appraisals, recognition of opportunities for improving United Kingdom value-added in purchases, identification of vulnerable areas of United Kingdom industry competitiveness, and wider appreciation of new products and technology and their costs and benefits.

NHS Management

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department has carried out a recent study of management in the National Health Service, with particular regard to non-clinical factors affecting waiting lists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: In July my right hon. Friend asked the chairman of the regional health authorities to lead their districts in an analysis of the nature, cause and extent of waiting list and waiting time problems. Their reports show that in many cases solutions to these problems can be found or significantly assisted by non-clinical activities through more effective management of existing resources and facilities. The Department and regions are now acting on those reports.

NHS (Equal Opportunities)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what progress has been made by the King Edward's fund task force on equal opportunities in the National Health Service; and when the initial findings of the task force are expected to be published;

(2) what actions he proposes to take to ensure the implementation of equal opportunities policies in the National Health Service;

(3) if he will list (a) the health authorities which have no comprehensive equal opportunities policies; and (b) the health authorities which have taken no steps to translate policies into effective programmes of action.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities are responsible for meeting the requirements of the Race Relations Act and the Commission for Racial Equality's code of practice. It was our concern whether adequate progress was being made by health authorities in implementing equal opportunities policies which led my right hon. Friend to invite the King Edward's fund to set up the task force.

The task force has the Government's full support and is supported by funding from the Department. It is intended to have a three-year life. Its programme of work will include the establishment of a clearing house for information, and work in depth with a small number of health authorities who are at different stages in the implementation of equal opportunities policies. It will be reporting to the King Edward's fund.

Health authorities were advised when the task force was established that they should not wait for the task force's advice but should press ahead in accordance with the commission's code of practice. We have no central information on the extent to which individual health authorities have done so.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services following the comments of Sir Ralph Milner-Brown on behalf of the employment appeal tribunal in the matter of Dr. M. Noone v. North-West Thames regional health authority, if he will issue an amended form of the circular HC(78)36 attaching the 1984 code of practice from the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mrs. Currie: The code of practice was drawn to the attention of health service management when it was published by the Commission for Racial Equality. In May this year, the Department wrote to all general managers, announcing the establishment of the King Edward's fund task force, and reminding health authorities that they should be taking action in accordance with the Commission's code of practice.

We do not, at this stage, see any need to further reinforce the guidance we have given to health authorities.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the cost of appeals by the South-West Thames and North-West Thames regional health authorities following the industrial tribunal's decisions on racial discrimination in consultant appointments.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member way wish therefore to contact the Chairman of North-West Thames and South-West Thames regional health authorities.

Vaccine Damage Payments Scheme

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was his Department's original estimate of the savings to be made by the introduction of the time limit on the vaccine damage payments scheme.

Mr. Major: None. The six-year time limit on claims was included in the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979 because of the difficulty of considering claims older than this. But the time limit was not brought into effect until 9 May 1984 in order to give everyone who had suffered vaccine damage since 1948 the opportunity of making a claim.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each year since the introduction of the vaccine damage payments scheme, the number of awards given under the scheme; and what was the number of claims rejected each year.

Mr. Major: The information requested is set out in the following table:

	Awards	Rejections
1980	255	150
1981	74	71
1982	43	54
1983	42	107
1984	29	124
1985	26	75
1986[1]	14	64
	[2]832	[2]2,838

[1] To 14 November.

[2] Includes 432 cases originally rejected but subsequently awarded by a Vaccine Damage Tribunal.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's estimate of the total number of people severely disabled within the meaning of the Vaccine Damage Payments Act; and what is the estimate for the number less severely damaged as a result of vaccination.

Mr. Major: 832 awards have been made on the basis that vaccine damage resulted in severe disablement and there have also been 14 claims involving vaccine damage which were rejected because disablement was not severe. A further 1,637 claims involved severe disablement but were rejected because disablement was not a result of vaccine damage, and in a further 326 rejected claims the cause of disablement was not investigated because disablement was substantially less than severe.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's estimate of the additional cost of making payments available, on a sliding scale, to everyone disabled as a result of vaccination.

Mr. Major: I regret there is insufficient information for any reliable estimates to be made.

Disabled People

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when it is intended that the survey of disability presently under way will be completed; when the proposed subsequent review of social security provisions for disabled people is planned to start and to finish; when the results of that review will be presented to Parliament; and when the subsequent new arrangements are expected to come into force.

Mr. Major: Publication by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys of the results of its current survey of disabled people is expected in 1988. It is too early to give a timetable for the review of social security benefits for disabled people and for subsequent action.

Children at Risk

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has given any guidance to social service departments on the advisability of informing head teachers of schools when a child is notified to social service departments as being at risk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Guidance issued by the Department recommends that the decision whether the responsible agencies should regard a child as at risk of abuse should be taken at a case conference of the professionals, including teachers, concerned with the particular child and his family. In May we issued new draft guidance on child abuse procedures and we are now considering the comments received. Communication with the head teacher is one of the subjects which will be covered in the final version which we hope to issue in the spring.

Urinary Tract Infections (In-patients)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospital in-patients caught urinary tract infections in 1978 and in each subsequent year.

Mrs. Currie: Information on how many hospital in-patients caught urinary tract infections in 1978 and in each subsequent year is not available.

Post-operative Infection

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the rate of post-operative infection in each health region in 1978 and each year since.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will produce tables to show how many people in Wales in 1983 were (a) below, (b) at and (c) up to 140 per cent. of the supplementary benefit level on the latest basis and on a basis comparable with 1979 and 1981; what percentage of the total population they represent in each case; what his estimate is of the number of children living in such households in each case; and what percentage of total children they represent in each case;

(2) how many children in Wales were living in families below supplementary benefit level, on supplementary benefit, and with incomes up to 140 per cent. of supplementary benefit level, classified by employment status; whether they were in one or two-parent families in 1983 on the latest basis and on a basis comparable with 1981 and 1979; and what proportion these children made up of the total number of children.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information requested cannot be provided. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 6 November at column 584.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services taking supplementary benefit for a married couple in 1956 as the base = 100, what has been the real increase in supplementary benefit each year since 1956; on the same basis what has been the real increase in national average earnings each year since 1956; and what are the equivalent figures, taking the 1979 supplementary benefit level as the base = 100.

Mr. Major: The information is as follows:

	January 1956 = 100 (a)	November 1979 = 100 (b)	January 1956 = 100 (a)	November 1979 = 100 (b)

[3] Provisional.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the ratio of supplementary benefit claimants to staff in, (a) each local office of his Department in London, (b) the average in each social security region and (c) the national average for 1 August 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Hospital (Beds)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Eccles, on 8 December, he will now make it his policy to collect central information on the annual costs of acute, chronic and geriatric beds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: No. Substantial changes are being introduced from 1987-88 in the information about hospital services, including financial information, which is collected by the Department. These give effect to the recommendations of the steering group on health services information. The new form of health authority accounts will include information on the cost of treating patients in more than 20 different specialties or specialty groupings.

Information on the cost of a hospital bed is of little value by itself. Financial information, if it is to serve a useful purpose, needs to be related to the services actually provided—for example treatment given to patients. The changes we are now making are directed above all to improving the quality and relevance of information for management at all levels in the National Health Service.

Secure Unit Places

Mr. Gerald Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many secure unit places are available for those held in secure care and accused of serious criminal offences in (a) England and Wales and (b) the Greater London area;

(2) how many secure unit places for those held in secure care and those accused of serious criminal offences were in use at the latest available date in (a) England and Wales and (b) the Greater London area.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney) on 3 July at columns 634-636 which provided details of regional secure units in England. This information is still broadly accurate. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales would be able to supply information on the proposals for regional secure accommodation in Wales.

While regional secure units will treat mentally disordered patients accused of serious criminal offences, places for such offenders are not separately allocated.

Health Services (Value)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he makes of the value of health services received per head of the population by social classes I to V.

Mrs. Currie: Health service activity is not recorded by reference to socio-economic class and information on which to base a reliable estimate is not therefore available.

Expert Advisory Committees

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the status of the 25 expert advisory committees listed in columns 587 and 588 of the Official Report for 16 May but not listed in the replies to the hon. Member for Gedling on 9 December.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mental Handicap (Exhibition)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to mental handicap in perspective to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 23 February 1987 to 27 February 1987.

AIDS

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, for purposes of planning the future allocation of resources within the National Health Service, what epidemiological assumptions he is using in respect of the increasing incidence of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1986, c. 201]: Short-term projections as to the likely increase in the incidence of AIDS are based on the assumption that the number of cases will continue to rise at the same rate as previously.

Wessex Health Authority (Computer Contracts)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on 9 December, whether Arthur Andersen and Co. submitted the lowest tender for each of the contracts referred to.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 289]: Wessex regional health authority did not compare costs for each separate sub-system, because its declared objective was a single integrated system. Some of the combinations proposed were not capable of satisfying the identified requirements. On a cost basis, Arthur Andersen and Co. were equal lowest at the end of the evaluation process but best value for money overall.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those who advised Wessex health authority on any aspect of the prospective contracts before tenders were invited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 290]: Between October 1984 and October 1985 Wessex regional health authority was advised by

Deloittes, Haskins and Sells Model Systems
PACTEL
F International.

Warnock Report

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has instigated consultations with the medical profession concerning legislative implications of the recommendations contained in the Warnock report.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1986, c. 333]: Preparing the consultation document on these matters which was issued as Cm. 46 on 10 December did not involve negotiations with the medical profession. Relevant medical organisations are being invited to comment on the consultation document.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Forth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest meeting of the European Communities, Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lawson: The Community's Economic and Finance Council met in Brussels on Monday 8 December, under my chairmanship. My hon. Friend, the Economic Secretary represented the United Kingdom.

The Council adopt a directive on the annual and consolidated accounts of banks and other financial institutions. The directive provides for a standardised accounting regime for banks and other financial institutions throughout the Community, and is an important element in the achievement of the internal market for financial services.

The Council had a further discussion of the Commission's annual economic report for 1986-87. The report, as amended to take account of member states' comments, was agreed by the Council.

The Council discussed the Greek economy, and the progress made in its economic stabilisation programme since the Council agreed in November 1985 to a Community loan of 1·75 billion ecu (about £1·3 billion). The Council agreed that the Commission should release the second half of the loan. In reaching its view, the council took into account the provisional agreement reached between the Commission and Greece that:

(a) the import deposit scheme will be abolished by the end of April 1987;

(b) phasing out of the export subsidy scheme will start in January 1987, and be completed over the following three years. The Commission decision authorising the continuation of the scheme will contain a safeguard clause designed to cover any particular problems created by the scheme for other member states.

The Council reached agreement (subject to a United Kingdom parliamentary scrutiny reserve) on a two-year extension, from 31 December 1986 to 31 December 1988, of the Community's medium-term financial assistance facility, and on a reduction of 2 billion ecu (about £1·5 billion) in the total of credits under the facility. The reduction in the total of credits matches a 2 billion ecu increase agreed in 1985 in the lending ceiling for the Community loan mechanism.

The Council had a useful discussion on travellers' allowances, in particular duty and tax-free shopping, against the background of its acceptance of the continuing existence of duty and tax-free facilities as long as fiscal frontiers remain. The Commission made clear its intention to take initiatives to meet the different concerns of a number of member states in this area. Good progress was made on finding solutions to those concerns. In respect of the Channel fixed link, the Commission gave an assurance that the link would enjoy the same fiscal treatment as other cross-channel operators.

The Council also discussed duty-free admission of fuel contained in the tanks of goods transport vehicles, and the fiscal treatment of rum imported from the Frnech overseas departments.

Community Budget

Mr. Colvin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the 10 December Budget Council and the latest steps in the 1987 Community budget process.

Mr. Brooke: The Budget Council met in Strasbourg on the evening of 10 December in an attempt to reach agreement with the Parliament on the Community budget for 1987. I was in the Chair.

In response to the Council's second reading budget proposals, which respected the budget discipline limits for agricultural and non-obligatory expenditure, the European Parliament's Budget Committee had recommended increases in expenditure which would have taken the budget beyond the budget discipline limit on non-obligatory expenditure by some 293 mecu (£183.8 million*) on commitment appropriations and some 93 mecu (£58·3 million) on payment appropriations. The Council's budget discipline agreement requires that the maximum rate of increase in non-obligatory expenditure laid down in the treaty, 8·1 per cent. for 1987, be respected.

The Council made clear to the Parliament's representatives that, while it was prepared to go a long way towards meeting the Parliament's priorities within the budget discipline-maximum rate totals, it was not willing to increase non-obligatory expenditure in total beyond the maximum rate levels. The Council pointed out that the deficit which was expected to be carried forward from the current year was likely to use up all the remaining resources within the 1·4 per cent. VAT ceiling and that there was therefore no money to finance further increases in expenditure. Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Luxembourg and the Netherlands joined the United Kingdom in insisting that the budget discipline limits must be respected.

The Parliament's representatives made clear that they could not agree that the increase in non-obligatory expenditure should be limited to the 8·1 per cent. maximum rate. Hence no agreement was reached between the Council and the Parliament's representatives.

The Parliament's plenary then voted on 11 December for amendments to non-obligatory expenditure whose effect would be to raise both commitment and payment appropriations above the maximum rate of increase, by 185·5 mecu (some £116·4 million) and 88·2 mecu (some £55·3 million), respectively.

When the results of these votes were announced, I formally reminded the Parliament's plenary that the Council had not agreed to raise the maximum rate and that the budgetary procedure provided for in article 203 of the treaty had not therefore been completed.

As the 3 July judgment by the European Court of Justice on the 1986 budget dispute makes clear, the President of the Parliament is not in a position under article 203 of the treaty to declare adopted without the Council's agreement a budget for 1987 which does not respect the 8·1 per cent. maximum rate. From 1 January 1987, therefore, the Community will have to operate under the provisional twelfths regime set out in article 204 of the treaty. The broad effect of this is to limit expenditure on individual lines month by month to one twelfth of the level of the preceding year, though the Council may authorise by qualified majority expenditure in excess of one twelfth subject to the further limitations set out in the treaty. While the provisional twelfths regime lasts, we would expect to make VAT contributions, and to benefit from VAT abatements under the Fontainebleau system, at the same monthly rates as in the current year: the favourable effect on our net budgetary position would however be unwound after a 1987 budget has been adopted.

The Government naturally regret that the Council and the Parliament were unable to reach agreement last week on a budget for 1987 but welcome the Council's determination to insist on adherence to budget discipline.

Investment Income Surcharge

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the total yield resulting from the reintroduction of the investment income surcharge at the rate prevailing in 1983-84 on the basis of the lower threshold; indexed to 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue yield from an investment income surcharge of 15 per cent. on investment income over £8,300 in 1986-87 would be about £450 million in a full year. This estimate does not allow for any possible behavioural effects.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to introduce legislation to reduce the amount of mortgage interest tax relief available to unmarried partners purchasing a house jointly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 5 December at column 825 to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle).

Debts (Africa)

Mr. Wigley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the amount of money paid by each African country last year to the United Kingdom Government for servicing debts.

Mr. MacGregor: The amount paid directly to the United Kingdom Government by African countries in the last financial year for aid loans made by the Overseas Development Administration was £9,817,572. During 1985 official development assistance to Africa amounted to £280,334,000 — of which debt relief totalled £18,192,000.

£1 Notes

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many £1 bank notes remain in circulation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: At the end of November 1986 the total number of £1 bank notes outstanding was 119 million. No statistics are available showing the amount of £1 notes in active circulation.

Profit-Sharing

Mr. Steel asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his estimate of the total number of profit-sharing schemes operated by firms in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his current estimate of the number of firms operating profit-sharing schemes; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his estimate of the number of employees in firms operating profit-sharing schemes.

Mr. Lawson: There are no reliable estimates for the whole economy of the number of profit-sharing schemes, the number of firms operating profit-sharing or the number of employees covered. Many different types of arrangement may be represented as profit-sharing, including employee share ownership schemes, profit-related pay schemes and other arrangements which are not formalised in a published scheme. Analysis of unpublished data from the 1984 workplace industrial relations survey (sponsored by the Department of Employment, the Economic and Social Research Council, the Policy Studies Institute and the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service) suggests that one in five establishments may operate profit-sharing in one form or another. Because large firms often have many establishments, the data cannot be used to infer the number of firms involved. But a survey for the Department of Employment in 1985 of companies with annual turnover exceeding £750,000, reported in the September 1986 Employment Gazette, suggested that about one in five of these companies have an all-employee profit-sharing scheme of some sort. Some 6 per cent. of these companies had cash-based profit-sharing of some sort. Statistics on all-employee share schemes approved for the purposes of the Finance Acts 1978 and 1980 show that as at November 1986 1,186 such schemes had been approved, covering well over 10,000 companies, and that some 1·5 million employees had taken up shares or interests in shares under them. The Government welcome the spread of employee share ownership and will continue to encourage it. The Government would also welcome widespread adoption of profit-related pay schemes which, as discussed in the Green Paper "Profit Related Pay" (Cmnd. 9835) published in July 1986, would bring benefits to the whole economy in productivity, living standards and employment.

Strip Searches

Mr. Madden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what clothing is available at Leeds/Bradford airport, and other ports of entry in the United Kingdom for passengers to wear whilst their own clothing is being searched by Customs and Excise staff;

(2) what instructions have been issued to Customs and Excise staff at ports of entry in the United Kingdom concerning the stripping and searching of passengers; and if he will place a copy of such instructions in the Library;

(3) how many visitors to the United Kingdom including those holding a visitor's visa, have been stripped and searched at terminals three and four at Heathrow airport in the current year to date;

(4) how many men, women and young people aged under 18 years have been stripped and searched by Customs and Excise staff at Leeds/Bradford airport in the current year to date;

(5) what categories of passenger are exempt from being stripped and searched by Customs and Excise staff on arrival at United Kingdom ports of entry; and what action is taken against any passenger who refuses to agree to being stripped and searched.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Transferable Allowances

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the cost to the Exchequer if transferable allowances were introduced with no losers;

(2) how many winners and losers there would be if transferable allowances were introduced at nil cost to the Exchequer; and how many would win or lose (a) less than £1 per week, (b) £1 to £2, (c) £2 to £3, (d) £3 to £4, (e) £4 to £5, (f) £5 to £7, (g) £7 to £10, (h) £10 to £15, (i) £15 to £20, and (j) more than £20 per week.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Wiggin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what gross and net revenue he expects to receive if Her Majesty's Customs and Excise implement the proposals contained in the consultative document on value added tax, "Input Tax, Origin and the Scope of right to Deduct", issued in August; and what he estimates will be the compliance costs.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Income Tax

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage share of tax paid by the top 5, 10 and 20 per cent. of income earners for the years 1978-79 and 1985-86.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1986, c. 775]: The information is given in the table. The analysis is of single people and married couples and the quantiles are determined by reference to income tax liability. The figures for 1978-79 are based on the survey of personal incomes for that year. For 1985-86, they are based on a projection from the 1984-85 survey and are therefore provisional.

Quantile shares of income tax

Quantile group of tax units[1]	1978-79 per cent.	1985-86 per cent.
Top 5 per cent.	24·0	26·5
Top 10 per cent.	34·5	37·0
Top 20 per cent.	50·2	53·0

[1] ie counting married couples as one and combining their incomes.

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in the 1987-88 financial year of introducing a reduced rate tax band of (a) 25 per cent. and (b) 20 per cent. on the first £1,500 of taxable income; and what would be the effect on the net income of (i) a single person, (ii) a couple where the wife is not working, and (iii) a couple where the wife is working and paying tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1986, c. 775]: The direct revenue costs are estimated to be about £1,300 million and £2,800 million, respectively, in a full year at 1987-88 levels of income, compared with the illustrative income tax regime resulting from indexation by 3·25 per cent. The estimates assume that a separate lower rate band would be available to a married couple against the wife's earned income and that the thresholds for higher rate tax would be unaffected by the introduction of the lower rate band. The effect on the incomes of taxpayers with taxable income of at least £1,500 per annum would be as follows:

Increase in income after tax (£ per week)

	Reduced rate of tax
	25 per cent.	20 per cent.
Single person	1·15	2·60
Married couple (wife not working)	1·15	2·60
Married couple (wife working[1])	2.30	5.20

[1] Assuming that both husband and wife each have taxable income of at least £1,500 per annum.

Departmental Expenditure

Dr. Bray asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis the central team of Treasury and other officials reported on page 37 of the executive summary of their multi-departmental review of budgeting, published by the Treasury in March, that there is no evidence that Departments produce a record of expenditure committed but not yet incurred.

Mr. MacGregor: [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 260]: The central team's comment was made in the context of the summarised information for top management boards in the seven departments they studied. It was not intended to suggest that such records were not produced but to encourage Departments who produce commitment information to summarise it for use by top management.

Leasehold Rental Payments (Taxation)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue in 1985-86 from tax on domestic leasehold rental payments.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 260]: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, columns 240-2, if he will give a breakdown between all Government Departments and agencies of the figures given in that answer; and whether all expenditure on behalf of Government Departments and agencies on advertising was made through the Central Office of Information.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 10 December 1986, c. 188]: A breakdown of the answer provided on 25 November, Official Report, columns 240-2 is not readily available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. All departmental advertising expenditure, with the exception of that on staff recruitment and national savings goes through the Central Office of Information. Some agencies do not place their advertising through the Central Office of Information.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Authorities

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will produce a table, by water authority, of the specified rate of return on value of net assets for each year from 1979 to the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. John Patten: I shall answer this question shortly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Recorders

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Attorney-General in how many cases since May 1979 the Lord Chancellor has not renewed the appointments of recorders at the Crown court, willing to continue to serve as such, on the grounds of alleged incompetence.

The Attorney-General: The figures from 1979 are not immediately available. Since 1 January 1981 the appointments of 27 recorders have expired and not been extended. In some of the cases, the recorders had reached the age limit of 72. In some others, the Lord Chancellor was not satisfied of their continuing fitness or suitability to be recorders.

Neville Chamberlain (Private Papers)

Mr. Alton asked the Attorney-General what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to seek to prevent the publication of Neville Chamberlain's private papers relating to 1936.

The Solicitor-General: I have been asked to reply.

Under section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958, public records relating to the abdication of King Edward VIII have been closed for 100 years, until 2 January 2037. The holders of the private papers of certain people who held high ministerial office at that time, including Mr. Neville Chamberlain, were asked not to release for public inspection material from those papers relating to the abdication. When this request was first made to the University of Birmingham in 1974, it was asked, and agreed, to keep entries in Mr. Chamberlain's diary relating to the abdication closed for 100 years. In subsequent correspondence two years later the university was told that the then Lord Chancellor's approval had been given to a 50-year closure in respect of public records. This was not correct; and when the mistake came to light earlier this year it was drawn to the university's attention and it was asked, and agreed, to keep the material closed for 100 years, in accordance with the original request.

THE ARTS

Objects in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Bright asked the Minister for the Arts whether any objects or property have been accepted in satisfaction of capital transfer tax since his answer of 8 July, Official Report, column 97.

Mr. Luce: Since my answer of 8 July 1986 the Government have accepted in lieu of tax the following items:

	Amount of Tax Satisfied
Three Flemish still life floral studies	£330,000

The following properties have been allocated to recipient institutions:

"Arts and Disabled People"

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received from the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust concerning the recommendations of "Arts and Disabled People", the report of a committee of inquiry under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Attenborough; what action he has taken or will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I met the chairman of the Carnegie Council in January of this year, and we have corresponded on a number of the recommendations of the Attenborough Committee. The Arts Council has published a code of practice to encourage its clients to consider the needs of people with disabilities, both as participants in the arts and as members of audiences. The council has now appointed a full-time disability officer. Other funding bodies have issued codes of practice.

I am satisfied that the arts bodies for which I am responsible are fully aware of the needs of disabled people, and are doing all that they can to meet those needs.

ENVIRONMENT

Small Businesses

91. Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he proposes to take to encourage small businesses in rural areas.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government, through the Development Commission and its agency the Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas, already do much to help small businesses in rural areas. For example, they provide advice, loans and other services for over 20,000 small businesses employing some 100,000 people and have financed wholly or partly over 3 million sq ft of factory space. The Development Commission through CoSIRA expects to give grants worth over £1 million for the conversion of redundant buildings to industrial or service uses, and will continue to arrange technical and other training courses. CoSIRA has recently improved its marketing services and the commission has set up a scheme to help local enterprise agencies in rural areas, complementing the Department of Employment's scheme. To enable the commission to do still more, the Government made an extra £2 million available to the commission in the recent public expenditure settlement.

Nitrates

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to seek to reduce the nitrate content of public water supplies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend announced on Monday 15 December that the report of the nitrate co-ordination group was being published on that day. The Government are urgently considering the report, which assesses the various ways in which nitrate may be reduced in water supplies and makes a number of recommendations.

Land Registers

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are taken to ensure that local authorities list in the land registers all the land which they are obliged to register; what is his estimate of the extent to which local authorities are understating their land holdings in the land registers at present; and what information he has as to regional variations in such understating of land holdings.

Mr. John Patten: Under part X of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, registration of unused and under-used land is carried out by the Secretary of State and it is he who decides whether or not land meets the conditions for registration laid down in section 95(2) of the Act. All public bodies in England to which part X applies, including local authorities, have been asked to submit information about any under-used land which may be eligible for registration, and are asked periodically to review the accuracy of that information. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment proposes to introduce legislation at the earliest opportunity to strengthen his powers to require information about public bodies' under-used land, but at present the information which would enable him to estimate the extent to which local authorities understate their holdings of such land is not available.

Departmental Initiatives (Women)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those initiatives of his Department which have been of benefit to women, since 1979, the cost or estimated cost of these initiatives, and the proportion of the total budget of his Department this represents.

Mr. Ridley: There has long been a policy of equal opportunities for women in my Department. My Department does not discriminate against women. I have no idea what the cost to public funds of such a policy has been.

"Building for the Future"

Mr. Richard Alexander asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to "Building for the Future" to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. John Patten: Yes. The Secretary of State has given his approval in principle.

Rent Arrears

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce legislation in regard to the collection of rent arrears by local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have nothing to add at present to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) on Wednesday 10 December, at column 188.

Voluntary Neighbourhood Councils

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by district the names of those voluntary neighbourhood councils of which he is aware.

Mr. Chope: I have no recent information about neighbourhood councils. The Association for Neighbourhood Councils may be able to assist the hon. Member: its address is 50, Whetstone Close, Farquhar Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham B15 2QN.

Birdwatching

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of people who participate in the recreation of birdwatching.

Mr. Waldegrave: Records of numbers of people who engage in birdwatching are not maintained by my Department; they are known, however, to be very high.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek to make further facilities available for the recreation of birdwatching; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Facilities for birdwatchers are, I believe, extensively provided by voluntary organisations, sometimes in co-operation with organisations such as national part authorities. I see no need for direct Government intervention.

"Arts and Disabled People" (Report)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust concerning the recommendations of "Arts and Disabled People", the report of a committee of inquiry under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Attenborough; what action he has taken or will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The trust wrote in September 1985 to draw the Department's attention to the recommendations of the Attenborough committee. My Department replied in December 1985. No further representations have been received.

Political Propaganda

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about his proposal to introduce legislation to curb the dissemination by local authorities of partisan political propaganda.

Dr. Boyson: My right hon. Friend has received a significant number of representations about political publicity by local authorities since the Local Government Act 1986 was passed. These demonstrate the need to strengthen the present provisions, which we have undertaken to do.

River Thames (Pollution)

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what report he has received from the Thames water authority about the pollution of the Thames tideway on 5 July by the discharge of a large volume of sewage from Thames water authority stormwater outfalls.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply he has received to his question of December 8 to my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and also to the reply given to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 17 July.

I understand that Thames water authority is taking steps to ensure that such incidents on the Thames do not recur.

Mercury

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to mount a national campaign for the recovery of mercury batteries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department has been exploring with the battery industry the scope for practicable and economic battery recovery. I understand that the European Commission is considering making a proposal on this subject.

The Association of European Primary Dry Battery Manufacturers has adopted a programme which will achieve a 70 per cent. reduction in the mercury content of waste from domestic dry batteries by 1990.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the monitoring of mercury emissions from waste incineration plant.

Mr. Waldegrave: Industrial waste incinerators are required to be registered with the Industrial Air Pollution Inspectorate under the Health and Safety (Emissions into the Atmosphere) Regulations 1983 as chemical incineration works. The definition of chemical incineration works includes works for the destruction by burning of chemical waste containing mercury. Works so registered are required by section 5 of the Health and Safety etc. Act 1974 to use best practical means, and this will include monitoring of the process.

Monitoring carried out to date on municipal incinerators indicated the mercury emissions to be insignificant. The situation is being kept under review.

Rivers

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will report on the quality of rivers in England and Wales.

Mr. Waldegrave: The report of the 1985 river quality survey, which provides details of the quality of rivers, canals and estuaries in England and Wales, was published today. Together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

Using data routinely collected by water authorities, the survey shows that, although there has been deterioration in a few areas, there has been improvement in others. The overall quality of the waters surveyed continues to be high, with 90 per cent. of river and canal length and 92 per cent. of estuarial length assessed as being of good or fair quality.

Consideration is being given to the implications of these results, including the need for improvements to the survey methodology.

EC Directives

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's record of implementing European Community environmental directives; and what information he has on performance of other member states in this respect.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that actions have been brought in the European Court of Justice for non-compliance with environmental directives as follows:

	Number of actions
Belgium	7
Italy	4
France	2
Germany	2
Luxembourg	2
Netherlands	2
Denmark	1
Greece	1
Ireland	1
Portugal	—
Spain	—
United Kingdom	—

My hon. Friend may be interested to see a copy of a survey carried out by the European Community, from which these figures are taken. I have placed a copy in the Library.

Croxteth Hall and Country Park, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made towards the setting up of a trust to manage the Croxteth hall and country park in Liverpool; and if he will make a statement about the future of the property.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has appointed Mr. Philip Carter to the Merseyside residuary body with special responsibility for Croxteth hall and park. His task will be to set up and become chairman of a trust to take over responsibility for Croxteth from the Merseyside residuary body.

My noble Friend has today visited Croxteth with Mr. Carter and the chairman of the residuary body to discuss the main tasks which lie ahead. These will be to commission a long term management, development and financial plan and to appoint managing agents with the necessary expertise to run the estate; to recommend a programme of capital works; to discuss possible financial support with national and local bodies concerned with the heritage and the private sector; and to consider and consult on the constitution, structure and financing of a trust and to bring it into being, if possible, before 1 April 1988.

Water Authorities

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will produce a table, by water authority, of the specified rate of return on value of net assets for each year from 1979 to the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 15 December 1986]: The table shows rates of return of value of net assets from 1981-82 to 1987-88.

The form of accounts used prior to 1981-82 does not enable a rate of return comparable with later years to be calculated.

Note

A reassessment of asset values, described in note 1 to the current cost supplementary statements in the authorities' account for 1983-84, resulted in generally higher asset values. These higher values were taken into account in setting financial targets for 1984-85. The targets set for 1984-85 averaged about 1 per cent., for 1985-86 about 1·4 per cent., for 1986-87 about 1·6 per cent. and for next year about 1·9 per cent.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Lord Privy Seal, for each Session from 1975-76 to 1985-86, how many research assistants were employed by right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Biffen: I regret that detailed figures in the form requested by the hon. Member are not available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the principal achievements of his Department since 1983.

Mr. Channon: Since 1983 the Department of Trade and Industry has contributed by its support for industry and commerce to the substantial improvement in the operating environment for United Kingdom companies. This environment has enabled manufacturing output in the third quarter of 1986 to rise by over 7 per cent., investment in business to rise by 23 per cent. and non-oil exports by 16 per cent., all as compared with the third quarter of 1983. Over the same period output per head in manufacturing rose by over 9 per cent. Company profitability in 1985 was significantly higher than in 1983—in manufacturing it rose from 4·9 to 7·2 per cent.

The Department has played a major role in the liberalisation of the financial services markets, notably through the passage of the Financial Services Act in 1986, designed to enhance investor protection and to ensure that the United Kingdom remains a world financial centre. The Department has reached a memorandum of understanding with the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission to exchange regulatory information on a confidential basis to strengthen investor protection against fraud and market malpractice. Other memoranda of understanding are under discussion. The Department has also hosted an informal meeting of the regulators of the world's most important securities markets to discuss ways of improving co-operation amongst them.

Since 1983 the Department has completed the massive task of consolidating the Companies Acts and also the passage of the Insolvency Act 1985 and the subsequent consolidation of the law on insolvency and disqualification of directors. By May 1985 all regulations bringing into operation the provisions of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 were in place.

Within the European Community, the Department has pressed for the completion of the internal market and for greater European industrial co-operation. Making and accelerating progress towards the completion of the internal market has been a major objective of the United Kingdom presidency. In this we have been successful. Thirty six internal market measures have been agreed to date and we hope that further decisions can be taken before the end of the year.

Non-oil export volume has grown since 1983 by 16 per cent. and for manufactures by 15 per cent. The Department has helped industry to achieve this through a wide range of ministerial visits, trade policy work and, under the guidance of the British Overseas Trade Board, a programme of export promotion and services. The Department has continued to support British companies pursuing major project business overseas. Since June 1983 contracts worth £5½ billion with a United Kingdom content of £3½ billion have been won. The aid and trade provision was used to help obtain contracts with a United Kingdom content worth in excess of £700 million.

In 1986 a successful start was made to the new GATT round of trade negotiations with agreement at the September ministerial meeting in Uruguay on the inclusion of trade in agriculture and services in the discussion. The Department pursues a policy of reducing barriers to trade while working through the EC to see that our GATT rights against traded goods damaging to British producers are exercised in full.

The Department has been active in pursuing the Government's policy of transferring state owned businesses to the private sector. The sale of British Shipbuilders' warship building interests was completed in 1986, following the major privatisations in 1984 of Jaguar and British Telecom. Where businesses remain in the public sector the Department aims to ensure that they are efficiently managed on a commerical basis. 1986 saw the return of British Steel to profitability after over 10 years. The Post Office has maintained its good record on profitability and continued to improve productivity.

Technological innovation has been shown to be an important contribution to competitiveness and since 1983 approximately £1 billion has been spent by the Department to stimulate industrial research and development. Since 1985 the Department has placed emphasis on awareness and advisory services and has paid special attention to areas of technology with widespread applications across many industrial sectors such as microelectronics, information technology and advanced manufacturing technology. Special awareness programmes have also been mounted in the areas of quality and design. Under the £350 million Alvey programme of collaborative research into advanced information technology some 200 projects are now in place bringing academic researchers into collaboration with industry. The new £210 million LINK initiative just announced provides support for projects designed to enable industry to exploit the results of academic research.

The Department has encouraged industry to participate in international, and especially European, collaborative research and development programmes which it has ensured are of real benefit to industry. The EUREKA programme is now, following the United Kingdom chairmanship during the first six months of 1986, firmly established as a European industrial collaboration programme with 32 United Kingdom companies collaborating in projects with a total value approaching £1 billion.

A White Paper was published in 1986 with proposals to make the system of patents, designs and trade marks more relevant to industrial needs and a new service mark registration system has been introduced.

The British National Space Centre was established in November 1985 to provide a focus for United Kingdom space policy both nationally and internationally and to administer the United Kingdom contribution to the European Space Agency. The centre operates with a mix of staff drawn from the DTI, MOD, SERC and NERC.

Following the publication of a White Paper on regional industrial development in December 1983, decisions on the revised structure of regional industrial incentives were announced on 28 November 1984. The major changes from the previous structure affect the assisted areas map and regional development grants, and are designed to concentrate the Department's regional assistance where it can be most effective in creating new jobs.

The Department has played an increasing role in attracting a growing volume of inward investment to the United Kingdom. Since 1983, 1,025 investment decisions have been made by companies locating or expanding in the United Kingdom with nearly 140,000 jobs created or safeguarded. Among the significant individual investments was that of the Nissan Motor Company of Japan, which announced in 1983 its intention to locate its European manufacturing operation in the United Kingdom. In 1986 the plant was opened at Washington, Tyne and Wear with the Nissan announcement that it was moving to phase 2 in 1988, two years ahead of schedule, representing a total investment of just under £400 million and the eventual creation of 2,700 jobs.

The Department has pursued a wide range of matters of concern to consumers. The Consumer Protection Bill published last month will implement the EC directive on liability for defective products and introduce a general duty to supply only consumer goods that meet sound modern standards of safety. These measures, together with new safety regulations, such as those requiring child resistant packaging for dangerous household chemicals and continuing activities on updating safety standards and on home safety research, education and publicity are helping to reduce the sale of dangerous goods to the public. The Consumer Protection Bill will also make the law on misleading price indications clearer and fairer, thereby providing people with better information about the prices of consumer goods.

The Department has also acted as a national focus to spread industrial and technological awareness in schools and to devise new ways of meeting the technology skills shortage. The micros in schools programme has been successfully completed and the Department has strongly supported the 1986 "Industry Year" initiative.

Further progress has been made in implementing the financial management initiative in my Department.

Lawnmowers

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to how many factories in the United Kingdom produce power lawnmowers; where they are located; and what estimate he has made of the numbers employed in the manufacture of such products.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There are 13 main factories in the United Kingdom producing powered lawnmowers. They are widely distributed throughout Britain and employ about 3,500 people.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total value of power lawnmowers (a) exported from and (b) imported to the United Kingdom in the most recent annual period for which figures are available; and what were the principal export markets for United Kingdom power lawnmowers in that year.

Mr. Giles Shaw: For the 12 months ended September 1986 United Kingdom exports of power lawnmowers amounted to £21·4 millions: imports for the same period amounted to £24·1 millions. The principal export markets for United Kingdom power lawnmowers are the EEC, Australia and the United States of America.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many inspectors he proposes to appoint to undertake the periodic inspection of lawnmowers under section 7 of the Lawnmowers (Harmonisation of Noise Emission Standards) Regulations 1986; and if he will make a statement outlining the work which they will be doing;

(2) if the inspectors whom he will appoint to carry out the periodic inspections of lawnmowers under section 7 of the Lawnmowers (Harmonisation of Noise Emission Standards) Regulations 1986 will wear official uniforms or will carry other forms of identification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer he was given on Thursday 6 November, at columns 560-61, and would advise him that there is no intention to appoint any inspectors.

Rover Group (Corporate Plan)

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the Rover Group's corporate plan; when he intends publishing it; and whether he will publish it in full.

Mr. Channon: The Government expect to receive Rover Group's 1987 corporate plan around the end of the year. In accordance with the memorandum of understanding governing the relationship between Rover Group and the Government, I will in due course place in the Library of the House a summary. Following normal practice, this will exclude commercially sensitive details.

Liverpool

Mr. Parry asked the Minister of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Liverpool.

Mr. Channon: I visited Liverpool on 4 and 5 December 1986.

On the evening of 4 December I attended the Merseyside Industries dinner at the Lyceum club. On the morning of 5 December I had a breakfast meeting with the editors of the Liverpool Daily Post and the Liverpool Echo. Later in the day I visited the Ford Motor Company at Halewood and my Department's Liverpool office.

Council of European Communities (Research)

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the meeting of the Council of European Communities (Research) on 9 December.

Mr. Pattie: The Community's Council of Ministers (Research) met on 9 December in Brussels: I chaired the meeting; Mr. John Fairclough, the Government's chief scientific adviser, represented the United Kingdom.

The Council agreed a resolution taking note of the Commission's communication on a plan of action for the evaluation of Community research and development. The plan anticipates proposals for a formal programme of evaluation activities to be submitted early in 1987.

The Council considered a Commission paper on the relationship between Community research and EUREKA projects and agreed on the importance of drawing maximum benefit from the complementary nature of the two types of activity, while avoiding unnecessary duplication.

The Council discussed the report prepared by an independent panel of European industrialists on the Community's joint research centre (JRC) together with a Commission proposal for a revision in 1987 of the current JRC programme. The Council welcomed the panel's emphasis on the need for reform to make the JRC more effective and to increase its links with European industry.

The greater part of the Council's meeting was devoted to discussion, both in full session and in a series of bilaterals between all member states and the presidency, of the Commission's proposals for expenditure of 7·7 becu (£5·5 billion) for a new five-year framework programme of Community research and development. Despite intensive and lengthy negotiations, a consensus could not be reached. The Commission then put forward a proposal for a partial decision covering a three-year period at a cost of 3·7 becu (£2·25 billion).

British Steel Corporation

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to appoint external advisers in connection with the privatisation of the British Steel Corporation.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Government wish to transfer BSC's assets and activities to the private sector as quickly as is practicable. Subject to market conditions, the Government intend privatisation to take place during the course of the next Parliament. I welcome the corporation's results for the first half of the current year, which show a continuing improvement in performance and, although a longer period of profitability will be required before BSC can be returned to the private sector, I intend to appoint a merchant bank shortly to give preliminary advice to the Department in connection with the corporation's privatisation.

TRANSPORT

Tourism

92. Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what actions he is taking to solve the problem of tourism coach parking in central London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Those concerned with coach tourism in London have been following up the various proposals contained in the report "Tourist Coaches in London" which we published in March, copies of which were placed in the Library. The effects are being assessed as a basis for the next steps.

"Arts and Disabled People" (Report)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust concerning the recommendations of "Arts and Disabled People", the report of a committee of inquiry under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Attenborough; what action he has taken or will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have noted with interest the recommendations of the report "Arts and Disabled People" which concern transport.

We have a clear policy of working to improve transport services and facilities to enable disabled people to travel for whatever purpose they choose. Involvement in the arts, whether as spectators or participants, is part of that freedom of choice that we are working to achieve.

Marine Radar Specification 1977

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will revise the "Marine Radar Performance Specification 1977"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The "Marine Radar Performance Specification 1968" has been revised and is superseded by the "Marine Radar Performance Specification 1982". The "Marine Radar Reflector Performance Specification 1977" will be updated by an ISO standard which is now well advanced; this when published will be complemented by an identical British standard.

European Road Safety Year

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on developments during European Road Safety Year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On 17 December, acting as the presidency of the EC, we will draw together the main strands of ERSY activity in the United Kingdom and throughout the Community. Awards will be presented to individuals who have contributed to the year in each member state of the Community, and to children from the United Kingdom. The most important event will be the dispatch of a message from the Prime Minister to Transport Ministers in each member state. Her theme, and ours, is that one year is not enough: we must continue working for road safety.

During 1986 we have seen major initiatives from the private sector, from local authorities, from the police forces and from the Department. All these are reported in the ERSY newsfile. Copies are available in the Library.

The level of our participation has won us congratulations in Europe. I shall mention only a few examples: General Accident's £2 million road safety campaign and the AA research foundation from the private sector; the international conference organised by the Association of London Borough Road Safety Officers in July; the police national motorway campaign; and the international conference, "Transport Without Handicap" organised by the Department of Transport.

We have also reissued our accident investigation and prevention manual to local authorities, and will continue to encourage them to practise low-cost casualty reduction schemes.

The important message is that European Road Safety Year has not ended; we will keep on working for road safety at international, national, and local level. Specific ERSY themes on casualty reduction for the elderly, children and young people, cyclists and motorcyclists together with the greater installation and use of rear seat belts and child restraints, and the growing campaign against drinking and driving have been taken forward. The effort will continue. The majority of accidents and injuries are avoidable and preventable. The United Kingdom may have the least bad accident record in the European Community, but there were still 5,342 deaths and 320,819 injuries on our roads last year.

PRIME MINISTER

State Security

Q72. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government took any steps to dissuade Granada TV from broadcasting an interview with Peter Wright concerning Sir Roger Hollis broadcast in the "World in Action" programme "The Spy Who Never Was", broadcast on 16 July 1984.

The Prime Minister: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on matters which may arise in the proceedings concerning the peter Wright case in Australia while those proceedings continue. I also intend to follow the precedent set by previous Prime Ministers of not commenting on security matters.

Research and Development (Report)

Mr. Hind asked the Prime Minister when the second joint report from the chairman of the Advisory Council for Applied Research and Development and the Advisory Board for the Research Councils will be laid before the House.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg) on 12 December, at column 239.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government received any representations from Westland plc after 3 January about the continuing validity of her letter of 1 January to Sir John Cuckney about Government policy on the future of Westland; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November at column 50.

Engagements

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 16 December.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 16 December.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 16 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty The Queen.

Iran (Defence Equipment Sales)

Mr. George Robertson asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the Plessey deal to supply Iran with six AR-3D static air defence systems.

Mr. Renton: I have been asked to reply.

It is our policy not to comment on individual defence sales. However, in view of the current interest in Iran, I can confirm that a proposal from Plessey to sell static AR-3D radars to Iran does not breach our strict guidelines for defence sales to Iran and Iraq. The installations would be installed on permanent sites along Iran's northern and eastern borders, facing the Soviet Union. They will be of no relevance to the current conflict with Iraq.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Departmental Initiatives (Women)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those initiatives of his Department which have been of benefit to women, since 1979, the cost or estimated cost of these initiatives, and the proportion of the total budget of his Department this represents.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has taken a range of initiatives in accordance with its obligations as an equal opportunities employer. These include appointing equal opportunity officers, more flexible working arrangements and regular review consultations with the trade union side.

The Overseas Development Administration has taken a number of initiatives which are described in a recently published ODA booklet "Women in Development and the British Aid Programme" which also describes a number of projects involving or affecting women, and the spending involved. This booklet is available in the House of Commons Library.

It is not possible to estimate the cost of these initiatives.

Afghanistan

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards human rights in Afghanistan in the light of Amnesty International's report on torture in that country, a copy of which has been sent to him; and what action he intends to take.

Mr. Eggar: The Amnesty International report independently confirms the horrifying picture of the denial of human rights in Afghanistan separately documented in the reports of the United Nations special rapporteur. We have recently co-sponsored a United Nations resolution, which was endorsed by a large majority, expressing grave concern over the human rights situation in Afghanistan. We have already raised the question with the Soviet embassy in London. The Soviet Government can be in no doubt of our concern at these reports of torture and of the complicity of Soviet personnel.

Nicaragua

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what purpose Her Majesty's Government were represented by a member of the diplomatic service at the meeting of the Contras held to launch a provisional Government for Nicaragua in San José on 24 November.

Mr. Eggar: A member of Her Majesty's embassy in San José attended the meeting as an observer as part of his normal duties of obtaining information and reporting to us on developments in the area. Observers were also present from a number of other countries, including other European embassy representatives and parliamentarians from three Contadora group countries.

Mr. Mohammed F. Sheikh

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East of 21 October on the case of Mr. Mohammed F. Sheikh.

Mr. Eggar: The high commission at New Delhi has been asked to raise the case of Mr. Mohammed Farid Sheikh with the Indian authorities. As soon as the latter let us have a reply the hon. Member will of course be informed of the results.

Parking Fines

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish up-to-date figures indicating, in numerical order, the number of unpaid parking fines incurred by each diplomatic mission in the last two quarters for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested by my hon. Friend is given in the following table. The figures, and the order in which missions are listed, may be altered by late payments. The table also includes those international organisations which have incurred unpaid fines.

The annual rate for the most recent quarter was 23,348 or only 21 per cent. of the total for 1984 (108,932). We welcome this very significant improvement and hope it will be continued in the future.

WALES

Tourism

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been provided under the Development of Tourism Act 1969 by way of grants to bus operators in Wales in each of the past seven years; and what proportion of applicants for such grants are successful.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Since 1979 the Wales Tourist Board has received two applications from bus operators in Wales for financial assistance under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969. One was approved and a grant of £17,000 paid in 1983.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the latest figures for the average cost of public expenditure for every job created in the tourist industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is not available. However, in 1985-86 the average cost per job for tourism schemes aided by the Wales Tourist Board was just over £7,000.

Urban Aid, Arfon

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what applications he has received from Arfon borough council for urban aid for 1987-88; how much of this sum refers to projects for the improvement of parking facilities on council estates in the Caernarfon area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Arfon borough council has submitted 13 urban programme applications for consideration for 1987-88 amounting to £689,339; three applications amounting to £77,000 are in respect of projects to improve parking facilities on council estates in the Caernarfon area. These applications, together with all other bids received from Welsh local authorities, are currently being assessed and I expect to announce my decisions early in 1987.

Dyfed (Farmers)

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many farmers in Dyfed are owner-occupiers; and how many tenant farmers there are farming over three hectares.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: As at June 1985 there were 8,288 wholly owned main holdings in Dyfed; and 1,348 wholly rented main holdings of over three hectares. These figures exclude partially owned or rented holdings.

Ceredigion (Farmers)

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many farmers in Ceredigion are owner-occupiers; and how many tenant farmers there are farming over three hectares.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: As at June 1985 there were 2,370 wholly owned main holdings in Ceredigion; and 310 wholly rented main holdings of over three hectares. These figures exclude partially owned or rented holdings.

"Arts and Disabled People" (Report)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust concerning the recommendations of "Arts and Disabled People", the report of a committee of inquiry under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Attenborough; what action he has taken or will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The Department is in continual liaison with organisations concerned with the provision of arts for disabled people. We recently met representatives of the Carnegie council to discuss the implications of the Attenborough report and access by disabled people in Wales to the arts. Earlier this year we agreed to fund for two years the costs of an access officer at the Wales Council for the Disabled who will take particular account of the report's recommendations in relation to access by disabled people to arts buildings. Since 1985 we have also been funding part of the administration costs of a voluntary organisation, Arts for Disabled People in Wales, concerned with creating art opportunities for people with disabilities or special needs.

Surplus Butter

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to sell some of the surplus butter to the elderly and the needy during the Christmas period and the new year at a cheaper rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Responsibility for measures to dispose of surplus butter stocks rests primarily with the Commission. There are currently no proposals for a Christmas butter scheme.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to ensure that the milk quota system is being operated fairly and evenly within the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Generally, we are satisfied that most member states appear to be applying the quota system correctly. The Commission, which is responsible for the regulations, recently began action in the European Court against Italy for failing to operate the quota system.

Lime Sales

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of lime sales in Wales during the last 12 months; what were the corresponding figures for 1976; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information on lime sales in Wales is not collected.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the population of Wales in each of the years 1979 to 1986; what was the level in real terms of rate support grant in each of those years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The population of Wales, and the level in real terms of rate support grant, in the relevant years are shown in the following tables:

All figures are expressed in real terms at 1986-87 prices using the GDP (Market Prices) deflator.

The Government's policy on rate support grant since 1979 has already been made clear. I am today announcing my intentions for the 1987-88 Welsh rate support grant settlement.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that the rate support grant settlement for Wales for 1987-88 will include an increase in revenue support sufficient to meet in full the interest on the additional capital expenditure sanctioned by the Government for Welsh local authorities for 1987-88.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my statement to the House today. I intend to make appropriate allowance for the revenue consequences including interest payments arising from rate fund capital expenditure in 1987-88.

Hotel Classification Scheme (Wales Tourist Board)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the short-term and long-term policies, respectively, of the hotel classification scheme of the Wales Tourist Board.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The present scheme has been operational for just over a year and the public will experience it for the first time in the 1987 holiday brochures. In the short term, the Wales Tourist Board does not intend to make any significant changes to the scheme. In the longer term, it is the board's objective to effect a general raising of the thresholds for achieving particular classification ratings and through the introduction of a qualitative grading scheme.

Mentally Ill People (Gwynedd)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer on 8 December, Official Report, column 34, concerning Gwynedd health authority, whether he will make additional resources available to that authority in order to remedy deficiences in the services given to mentally ill people in Gwynedd.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The authorities in Gwynedd are presently considering the development of mental illness services in the light of the recent Health Authority Service report. It is premature to consider the question of additional Welsh Office funding.

Perinatal Mortality Initiative

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now publish the final report submitted under the perinatal mortality initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I am today publishing the final report submitted to me by the survey group set up under the perinatal mortality initiative which was announced in May 1983 by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House. Copies are being made available to all hon. Members representing Welsh constituencies.

This is a very important report, containing what I believe to be one of the most detailed surveys ever undertaken of maternity and neo-natal services in the National Health Service as well as the results of the all Wales perinatal mortality survey based on a clinical review of all perinatal deaths in Wales during 1985. I congratulate the survey group and the catalyst team on their achievement. In addition, I would like to thank all those in the Health Service in Wales and across the border whose co-operation has, I know, proved invaluable to the group.

A large number of the recommendations in the report confirm and reinforce accepted good practice in maternity and neo-natal services and the group has acknowledged the work of the Maternity Services Advisory Committee which reported to me and to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services over the last four years. Most of the report's recommendations fall to health authorities and in some cases to family practitioner committees to implement, but I recognise that the Welsh Office also has an important role in carrying forward the work of the initiative. My officials will be reviewing progress regularly with health authorities to help overcome particular problems and to continue—albeit in a different form—the work of the catalyst team set up under the initiative to stimulate professional and administrative action in this area.

In addition, my officials will be taking urgent steps to initiate detailed consultations with the service on the report's proposals for a designated regional service of neo-natal intensive care in Wales. I have noted the view of the group that a regional perinatal (intensive care) centre should be developed at the University Hospital of Wales, but do not consider that designation of such a centre should be made before this consultation has taken place. I recognise that considerable expertise has been developed at this hospital and that the necessary access to specialised support facilities is already in existence to a significant degree. I have therefore decided that in order to maintain and safeguard the existing neo-natal intensive care service in South Glamorgan, revenue funding should be made available on a recurrent basis pending the outcome of the consultation on a regional service, to enable the appointment of essential medical and nursing staff. It is my intention to make available central funding up to a limit of £0·25 million from 1 April next year.

The report also includes an analysis of the provision of equipment in special care baby units throughout Wales and identifies deficiencies in this provision. I believe it important that these special care baby units should be helped to continue to provide the level of care—in some cases quite advanced—which is already in existence and I also intend to make capital provision available in 1987-88 of £0·25 million to assist authorities to remedy deficiencies in this area. Health authorities are being invited to submit bids against this funding.

Finally, the report makes a number of important recommendations about the need to integrate all obstetric units on to district general hospital sites because of the adverse effects physical separation has on efficiency and safety. In many cases such units are already integrated and remaining problems will be susceptible to straightforward remedies. In some authorities, however, significant capital investment will be required before integration can be achieved, and we will be discussing this with the authorities involved. In the meantime I am asking all authorities to review the existing disposition of their maternity services and to review proposals for integration, where necessary, in the light of their forward capital programmes.

Although it is clear from the report that there remains considerable scope for further improvement in the provision of this service, that must be judged against the progress that has already been made. The perinatal mortality rate in Wales has continued to fall and by 1985 had reduced to almost half of its 1975 level, to 10·2 per thousand total births. This reflects the considerable effort already put in by service providers and I would like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to those involved. I look forward to seeing further improvements in the care of mothers and the newly born as the recommendations contained in this important report are implemented by the relevant components of the Health Service.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what pupil-teacher ratio his Department has proposed for the city technology colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Government's grant toward the running costs of city technology colleges will assume a pupil: teacher ratio which moves in line with good practice in LEA-maintained city schools.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the definition given by his Department of the extent of the catchment area from which pupils will be drawn for a city technology college; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Department's booklet on the city technology college proposals, which is available in the Library, explains that each CTC will serve a substantial catchment area. The precise arrangements will need to be decided case-by-case, but a typical catchment area is likely to contain at least 5,000 pupils of secondary age, of whom 750 to 1,000 will be admitted.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the first city technology colleges will be established; when the full list of proposed city technology colleges will be established; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend expects that the first city technology colleges will come into operation by September 1988 and that 20 will be in operation by the end of the decade. A list of possible locations for the first 20 city technology colleges is in the published proposals, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, for each city technology college that has been proposed by his Department if he will list (a) the number of inquiries, from potential sponsors, to his Department, (b) the number of firm offers of sponsorship and (c) the total amount firmly pledged in sponsorship.

Mr. Dunn: Several hundred inquiries have been received following the announcement of my right hon. Friend's proposals for city technology colleges. Many of these inquiries have led to discussions about support or sponsorship. More precise information could not be made available without disproportionate cost. At their request, discussions with prospective sponsors are being conducted in confidence.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, for each city technology college that has been proposed by his Department, if he will give the local education authority that covers that site, the total number of secondary education establishments within the city technology college's catchment area and the total number of pupils aged 11 years and above currently attending secondary education establishments in the catchment area.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has proposed that 20 city technology colleges be established over the next few years in a number of our cities. There is a list of possible locations at Annex B of the Department's booklet on CTCs, which is available in the Library. The precise locations will depend upon factors such as the local response to these proposals, and the availability of finance and of accommodation. The sizes and boundaries of the catchment areas will be determined in due course, in discussion between prospective sponsors and the department. The following local education authorities will be responsible for each of the suggested locations listed in the booklet:

Greater London:
North Peckham	Inner London Education Authority
Notting Hill

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science by what process entry to a city technology college will take place in its first year of establishment for pupils other than those aged 11 years; and who will administer applications for entry to a city technology college.

Mr. Dunn: The sponsors of each city technology college will be responsible, through the governing body, for deciding and administering the arrangements for admitting pupils. These arrangements will be the subject of prior discussion between the Department and the sponsors. One of the Department's aims in these discussions will be to secure, if possible, that some pupils aged more than 11 are admitted in the first year of establishment of the city technology college, so that it can progress as quickly as possible to full operation.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what will be the total expenditure by his Department on the city technology colleges programme in the current financial year, and the next financial year; and what proportion of this expenditure will be on additional administrative costs involved in the proposal.

Mr. Dunn: In the current financial year the estimated total expenditure by the Department on the city technology colleges programme will be £160,000. Estimated expenditure for the next financial year will be £4 million. In the current financial year 80 per cent. of the expenditure on CTCs represents additional administrative costs, and 20 per cent. other costs. It is not yet possible to break down the estimated expenditure in 1987-88 in this way.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy as to the minimum percentage of the total capital costs of establishing a city technology college firmly pledged by sponsors necessary for his Department to proceed with the establishment of that city technical college; and when such decisions will be taken.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that he is seeking all or a substantial part of the total capital costs of each city technology college from private sponsors. The decision whether or not to proceed with an individual project will depend on the response from prospective sponsors.

Departmental Initiatives (Women)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those initiatives of his Department which have been of benefit to women and girls, since 1979, the cost or estimated cost of those initiatives, and the proportion of the total budget of his Department this represents.

Mr. Dunn: Since 1979 the Government have published a number of statements on curricular policy which emphasise the importance of offering equal opportunities in education to both sexes. Her Majesty's Inspectorate has published reports on good practice such as "Girls and Science" and "Schools and Working Life". Our outlook is reflected in recent curricular developments such as the technical and vocational educational initiative and the microelectronics programme, and in examination reform. New criteria for initial teacher training require that all courses should equip students to guard against preconceptions based on the race or sex of pupils. Her Majesty's Inspectorate has promoted regional in-service training courses for teachers on different aspects of sex stereo-typing. The newly established National Council for the Youth Service will specifically look at youth work for girls and young women. In higher education, increased opportunities have been offered for appropriately qualified girls and women to study engineering and technology, and funding has been provided to improve the effectiveness of careers guidance and information. Encouragement for flexible forms of continuing education, such as open learning, should be of particular benefit to women mature students with domestic responsibilities.

These initiatives in general form part of broader programmes and their claim on the budget of the Department could not be isolated except at disproportionate cost.

"Arts and Disabled People" (Report)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust concerning the recommendations of "Arts and Disabled People", the report of a committee of inquiry under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Attenborough; what action he has taken or will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State received representations both from Sir Richard Attenborough when the report was published and later from the Carnegie council. A deputation from the council was received by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Mr. Dunn) on 6 March 1986 to discuss those recommendations of the report which refer to the education service. These accord with the Government's general policies on provision for special educational needs, but are mainly addressed to local education authorities and other local bodies, which must themselves decide how to allocate the resources available to them. My right hon. Friend has made it clear that the establishment of a central fund for building adaptations is not practicable given the structure on which the funding of educational provision is based.

Education (No. 2) Act 1986

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what commencement orders have been made, or are in prospect, for implementing the provision of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: A commencement order has now been made to bring the following sections of the Act into effect:

(a) on 7 January 1987
- 17—local education authority's to state curriculum policy
- 30 and 31—governors annual report and parents' meeting
- 33—local consultations over admission arrangements
- 44 to 46—safeguards in the teaching of political and sexual matters
- 50—specific grants for teacher training etc.
- 51 and 52—inter-authority recoupment
- 53—school transport
- 56—reports to the Secretary of State.

(b) on 1 April 1987
- 54 and 55—change of status from controlled school to aided school.

A further commencement order is planned for April 1987 to bring remaining sections into effect as follows:

(a) on 15 August 1987
- 47 and 48—abolition of corporal punishment in the maintained sector.

(b) on 1 September 1987

- 62—access to governing bodies' papers

and

the remaining school government provisions in Part I to III for new schools, any other schools without instruments and articles of government, and those schools for which local education authorities adopt the new arrangements in advance of the following dates for mandatory implementation of these provisions:

(i) 1 September 1988 for county and maintained special schools; and

(ii) 1 September 1989 for voluntary schools.

A circular will be issued very shortly setting out these arrangements and offering advice on the provisions being brought into effect on 7 January 1987. Further guidance will be offered in due course on the remaining provisions.

Education Pools

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what basis he proposes to close the education pools for 1981-82.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I propose to close these pools in the next financial year. I have been advised that the method used in previous stages of their operation to apportion between local education authorities expenditure within the capped pool for advanced further education was unlawful. However, this method was agreed in 1980 between the Government and representatives of the local education authorities in good faith, and the allocations flowing from it have been used by authorities in making budgets and rates. Accordingly, following consultation with the local authority associations, the Government propose to legislate in the present Session of Parliament to validate past stages in the allocation of the 1981-82 capped pool, and to enable it to be closed broadly on the basis originally envisaged. The method in question was used only for 1981-82 and the legislation will apply only to pooling in that year.

School Closures

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the proposals for school closures or reorganisations he has received from local education authorities which are outstanding for (a) 15 months or more, (b) 12 months or more, (c) nine months or more (d) six months or more and (e) three months or more, respectively; and when he expects to reach a decision in each case.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986, c. 42]: The outstanding proposals are as follows. My right hon. Friend will announce his decision on these as soon as possible.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Community Care

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken to ensure that the money going towards community care is used to best effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: I am concerned that our community care policy should be as effectively delivered and efficiently managed as possible. It is a key element in our strategy for the Health Service, for the personal social services and for social security. We devote substantial public funds to it so we need to be sure that we are doing all we can to get it right.

I have therefore asked Sir Roy Griffiths, the Government's adviser on the Health Service, to undertake an overview of community care policy. The review will be geared towards advice on action, as was Sir Roy's review of management in the Health Service. The review will be completed within 12 months.

The terms of reference of his remit are:

"To review the way in which public funds are used to support community care policy and to advise me on the options that would improve the use of these funds as a contribution to more effective community care."

We have in hand detailed studies of certain aspects of community care, particularly residential care. But we need to complement these studies by Sir Roy's overview for three main reasons.

First, the present structure of social security benefits may encourage people to go into residential or nursing care, when they might actually be better off in their own home and prefer to remain there. It is important that the social security system is sensitive to individual requirements. But it is equally important that the system should operate neutrally and not distort individual choice. Given the sharp rise in expenditure on residential and nursing care in recent years, we need to see whether the system is operating sensibly and fairly. One of the main focuses of Sir Roy's work will therefore be to examine the financing of nursing homes, residential care homes and other group accommodation in which social care facilities are provided on a communal basis and compare it to the financing of domiciliary care.

Second, substantial public funds go, quite rightly, into supporting our community care policies. They are provided through social security, through the personal social services run by local authorities and through the health service. Given the scale of funds involved, we need to look at whether they are being used to give best value for money, whether they are properly targeted and whether people who have help are given the help most appropriate to their needs.

Third, there is considerable variation in the way that community care funds are managed in different parts of the country. Indeed, it is sensible that the arrangements should be capable of adaptation to suit local circumstances. But this does not mean that there is no scope for better budgetary and other financial management arrangements, which would help to improve the use of resources. This, too, is an area which would benefit from an expert outside scrutiny.

National Insurance Cards

87. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans his Department has to reintroduce national insurance cards.

Mr. Major: The Department currently issues plastic national insurance number cards and, for self-employed people and voluntary contributors who pay national insurance contributions weekly, national insurance stamp cards. There are no plans to introduce other cards.

Single Payments

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for single payments were made during September 1986; how many of these were granted; what was the average payment to those granted; how many were rejected; how many have gone to appeal; and what were the corresponding figures for (a) May 1986 and (b) September 1985.

Mr. Major: Information on single payments is not available in the exact form requested as statistics are recorded at the time of the decision on the claim. Separate statistics are not kept on the number of single payment applications received each month.

National administrative statistics for social security appeals are summarised quarterly. The most recent statistics available are for appeals heard and decided in the three-month period ended 31 December 1985. The table shows the number of supplementary benefit single payment appeals and referrals registered with the social security appeal tribunals in each period, or uncleared from a previous period.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total number of payments made under the single payments system during the period 1 January to 3 June; what was the average payment made during this period; and what was the highest payment made to any one household or individual in this period; and what is the highest payment now possible under the revised regulations which came into force in August.

Mr. Major: The information requested on single payments for the period 15 January 1986 to 3 June 1986 (the nearest available dates to those asked in the question) is as follows:

Total number of single payments made, 2,165,271
Total amount paid, £156,184,947
Average payment, £72

Source: Four-weekly management information statistics (1986 provisional figures).

Information on individual payments is not kept at national or regional level and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

There is no absolute upper limit on the amount payable under the revised regulations which came into force in August 1986. The amount payable will depend, among other things on the numbers of members in the assessment unit and the items for which there is a need. These needs can vary depending on factors such as the health of the family members and/or the heating facilities in the accommodation occupied by the claimant.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will amend the supplmentary benefit single payment regulations which came into force in August in order to provide a greater flexibility for local offices to help families in need.

Mr. Major: No. The present regulations permit single payments to be made to claimants (including families) in a variety of circumstances; and allow adjudication officers some limited flexibility within the structure of a regulation based scheme. The Government recognise that a regulation-based scheme cannot by its nature cover all possible contingencies; and have already announced that the present system will be replaced from April 1988 by a social fund which should provide a greater degree of flexibility than exists at present.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total cost of single payments made by his Department's local offices to those receiving help under the supplementary benefit system in September, October and November; and what were the figures for the comparable periods in (a) 1983, (b) 1984 and (c) 1985.

Mr. Major: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many letters he has received from (a) right hon. and hon. Members and (b) the general public concerning difficulty faced by individuals and families following the changes made in August to regulations concerning single payments under the supplementary benefit system.

Mr. Major: In the period 11 August 1986 to 9 December 1986, 45 letters were received from right hon. and hon. Members on various matters connected with the single payment changes introduced on 11 August. Statistical information on letters from the general public about single payments is not kept in sufficient detail to record those letters specifically about the August changes.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the number of deaths from breast cancer from 1974 to the present time.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table.

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the number of deaths amongst women from all forms of cancer from 1974 to the present time and the proportion of those deaths from breast cancer.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table.

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to respond to the report on coronary heart disease amongst Asians in Britain, sent to him by the coronary prevention group and the Confederation of Indian Organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The report "Coronary Heart Disease and Asians in Britain" has been studied with interest within the Department. We are considering what, if any, special steps might need to be taken as part of the national heart disease prevention campaign planned to be launched next spring.

Sugars (COMA Panel)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will announce the membership and terms of reference of the COMA panel on sugars in the diet.

Mrs. Currie It is hoped that an announcement will be made following the meeting of the committee on the medical aspects of food policy (COMA) on 19 December.

"Arts and Disabled People" (Report)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust concerning the recommendations of "Arts and Disabled People", the report of a committee of inquiry under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Attenborough; what action he has taken or will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: My predecessor as Minister for the Disabled met representatives of the Carnegie council in January to discuss what action could be taken on those recommendations that related to the Department's responsibilities. It was agreed at that meeting that there should be further discussions at official level with the council and other interested bodies. A meeting was held in June between the Department, the council and the arts therapy associations to discuss the development of art therapy in the National Health Service. A further meeting is to be held with the council in January to discuss wider questions about the role of the arts in hospitals.

Drug Abuse

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of drug abuse of amyl nitrite, popularly known as "Poppers", have been reported to the health authorities; and what information his Department has on the medical and social consequences of such abuse.

Mr. Newton: Information on the reported misuse of amyl nitrite, or "Poppers" is not held centrally. I am advised that the direct inhalation of volatile nitrites/nitrates, including amyl nitrite, can lead to a number of effects such as euphoria and a fall in blood pressure leading to fainting, nausea and vomiting, palpitations, deeper, faster breathing, sensations of numbness and tingling. The effects are transitory and it is not thought that the abuse of these substances would lead to any lasting ill-effects in the majority of cases.

Mental Handicap Hospitals

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will name those mental handicap hospitals which have firm dates for closure; and if he will give a breakdown by region of these hospitals showing the anticipated dates and the numbers of residents to be discharged;

(2) if he will list the number of mental handicap hospitals in England which have closed down in each year since 1981; and if he will give a breakdown by region of these closures during the same period;

(3) if he will list by region the mental handicap hospitals which have not yet made any firm plans for closure; and if he will give the number of residents residing in these hospitals for the last three years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Mentally Handicapped People (Community Care)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for the last three years for which figures are available the number of residents who have moved out of long-stay mental handicap hospitals and who have (a) remained within the district, (b) returned to districts within the region and (c) moved outside the region;

(2) if he will give the numbers by region of people who have moved out of long-stay mental handicap hospitals during the last three years for which figures are available; and if he will give a breakdown by region and type of accommodation of where these former residents have now moved.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that I cannot give the hon. Member all the information he seeks. Information is not available centrally on where former mental handicap hospital in-patients go to live following their discharge; and the first move is not necessarily the last. Mental handicap hospitals are not classified by the length of stay.

Statistics of discharges and transfers from mental handicap hospitals and units in the period 1983-85 are available in the DHSS booklets "Mental Health Statistics for England", copies of which are in the Library. Most of the discharges relate to people who have been in hospital less than six months.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the numbers of residents of long-stay mental handicap hospitals in England who have moved into community homes or units with (a) one to 10 beds, (b) 11 to 20 beds, (c) 21 to 30 beds, (d) 31 to 40 beds and (e) 41 plus beds over the last five years.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry that I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. Information on where people move to on discharge from mental handicap hospitals is not collected centrally.

However, since 1984, statistics have been recorded on the number of residents in small National Health Service units providing community provision for mentally handicapped people. The table gives figures for 1984 and 1985. Units of more than 24 beds do not fall within the definition of "community unit" for the purpose of the statistics. Not all residents in these units have moved there from hospital.

Total	1,683	2,079

Information on residents in local authority homes and sponsored by local authorities in voluntary and private homes is given in the booklet "Homes and Hostels for the Mentally Ill and the Mentally Handicapped", copies of which are in the Library. Again, not all residents in these homes have been in hospital previously. We do not have figures for people in private and voluntary sector homes-villages etc. who are not sponsored by local authorities.

More detailed information will become available with the introduction of a new residential accommodation statistical return in April 1987.

Heating Costs (Single Payments)

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payments were made by his Department in respect of the extra heating costs incurred by recipients of supplementary benefit during last winter's exceptionally cold weather.

Mr. Major: Final returns are still awaited from a number of local offices, but latest figures show that a total of 493,000 payments have been made.

Baths (Payments)

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the medical conditions which qualify claimants to additional payments for extra baths;

(2) what recent changes have been made in defining the circumstances in which claimants suffering from arthritis, rheumatism and diabetes can qualify for additional requirements payments for extra baths.

Mr. Lyell: Additional supplementary benefit for baths is payable in respect of any person who, on medical grounds, needs more than one bath a week. It is for the individual adjudication officer to decide, with medical advice if necessary, whether or not the person meets the criteria for payment. Guidance to adjudication officers on the supplementary benefit legislation is issued by the chief adjudication officer and published in the S manual, a copy of which is in the Library. The guidance on eligibility for additional benefit for baths is at paragraphs S4531-4532. there have been no recent changes in definition in the relevant areas.

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the total number of payments for additional requirements for extra baths to claimants suffering from arthritis, rheumatism and diabetes in each of the years 1980 to 1985, inclusive.

Mr. Lyell: The total number of persons in respect of whom additional supplementry benefit for bath was paid is as follows:

1981	1
1982	3
1983	13

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average cost of each ambulance per patient mile in the London Ambulance Service for each year since 1983.

Mr. Newton: The average cost of each ambulance per patient mile since 1983 is as follows:

1984-85	[1]2·76

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients have been carried per division (a) as emergencies and (b) as hospital transport per division of the London Ambulance Service for each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The figures requested are:

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what training is given to drivers in the London Ambulance Service.

Mr. Newton: There are two grades of ambulance staff —ambulance persons and qualified ambulance persons —the training for which is as follows:

Ambulance Persons

These are staff who are normally engaged in conveying out-patients to and from hospital. These patients normally require the assistance of two members of staff to get them to and from the vehicle.

The training period is of four weeks during which time staff are trained in the lifting and handling of patients, radio procedures, vehicle familiarisation and given sufficient first-aid training in basic life support to enable them to care for a patient until the arrival of an emergency vehicle. Both members of crew are trained to the same level; no one is employed solely as a driver.

Qualified Ambulance Persons

These members of staff would normally undertake emergency ambulance work and be engaged on 24-hour rotas. Prior to being selected for training they must have completed at least one year in the ambulance person grade.

The training takes the form prescribed in the Millar report of 1966 and is of six weeks, consisting of the following subjects:

Advanced first aid
Gynaecological emergencies
Sudden illnesses
Major accident procedures
Administration of analgesic gases
Accident approach.

This is followed by a two-week course in the driving techniques required for a smooth, safe drive in emergency situations.

Staff are then posted to the operational training station at Bloomsbury where they work under the supervision of an instructor whilst carrying out emergency duties for a period of four weeks.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospital car drivers have been used by the London Ambulance Service by division in (a) 1983, (b) 1984, (c) 1985 and (d) the current year.

Mr. Newton: The number of hospital car service drivers used by the London Ambulance Service since 1983 is as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	1986[1]
North East	30	34	40	47

[1] As at 1 December 1986.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money has been paid to hospital car drivers in each of the London Ambulance Service areas for each year since 1983.

Mr. Newton: There was no divisional breakdown of figures in 1983 when the amount spent on the hospital car service was £326,600. Since 1984 the amounts are as follows:

Hospital Car Service

	North West £	North East £	South West £	South East £	Total £

Ambulance Personnel

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total number of (a) ambulance drivers and (b) ambulances attached per National Health Service region for each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information is not available centrally in the form requested. The table shows, for each National Health Service regional health authority, the numbers of all types of ambulance vehicles in use in the financial years for which these figures are available.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the latest cost of extending the long-term rate of supplementary benefit to the long-term unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: About £530 million.

Ear, Nose and Throat Waiting Lists

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes there has been in the numbers on ear, nose and throat in-patient waiting lists for English regional health authorities between December 1984 and December 1986.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry that I cannot give the right hon. Member the information he seeks in precisely the form requested. Figures for December 1986 are not yet available centrally. The available information is given in the table.

Warnock Report

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to whom he has circulated for comment his draft consultative document on implementing parts of the Warnock report; on what bases these organisations were selected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Department has sent copies of the consultation document "Legislation on Human Infertility Services and Embryo Research" (Cm. 46) to the main interested national organisations. A copy of the list has been placed in the Library. Comments from individuals and other organisations are also welcome. Similar consultations are being carried out by the other health departments.

Benefits (Appeals)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the latest information he has on waiting times for an appeal hearing against single payments and other benefits for (a) each of the main regions and (b) for Birkenhead.

Mr. Lyell: National administrative statistics for social security appeals are not disaggregated for areas smaller than a social security region. The information for Great Britain for the 12 months of 1985 is contained in table 49.02B in "Social Security Statistics 1986" (HMSO) a copy of which is in the Library. The boundaries of social security regions are shown in appendix 4 of that publication. The most recent statistics available are for appeals heard and decided in the three-month period ended 31 December 1985. Tables giving details of the average number of weeks between the lodgement of an appeal and the tribunal hearing for supplementary benefit single payment appeals and appeals for other benefits for each of the social security regions, have been placed in the Library.

Hypothermia

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths have been recorded in Leeds metropolitan district council during the last five years in which (a) hypothermia was given as the result of death, (b) hypothermia was noted as a contributory factor resulting in death for each of the following age bands (i) 0-two years, (ii) three to five years, (iii) six to 16 years, (iv) 17 to 64 years and (v) 65 years and over.

Mrs. Currie: The numbers of deaths registered in the Leeds registration district (which is conterminous with Leeds metropolitan district) where hypothermia (a) was stated as the underlying cause of death and (b) was mentioned on the death certificate, irrespective of whether it did or did not appear as the underlying cause, by specified age-groups for the years 1981 to 1985 are given in the table.

Claimants (Highland Region)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the total number of claimants applying to each of his Department's offices located within Highland region for each year from 1979 to 1986 respectively.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 295]: The Highland region is covered, for social security purposes, by the Department's local offices at Fort William, Inverness and Wick. The number of claims for supplementary benefit received at these offices each year from 1979 to 1986 was:

	Fort William	Inverness	Wick

NORTHERN IRELAND

Trial Delays

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, pursuant to the answer given on 27 November, Official Report, columns 420-21, by the hon. Member for Chelsea (Mr. Scott) to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) he will list the measures which have been introduced to eliminate avoidable delays between first remand and trial in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: The Government are conscious of the importance of public confidence in all aspects of the administration of justice, and accordingly the position is monitored on a regular basis by all the agencies involved. Particular attention has been paid to measures to help reduce the average period between first remand and trial. Within the past two years these have included:

(a) a review of organisation and staffing levels in the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Director of Public Prosecution's office, with a view to improving the work of file preparation and direction. A number of changes have been made as a result, including an increase in the number of professional staff assigned to the DPP's office;

(b) the Director of Public Prosecutions is shortly to reorganise his Department so that each professional member of staff preparing a case combines both directing and editing functions. This should increase the speed with which committal papers are despatched to the RUC for signature by the witnesses and service upon the defendant;

(c) the RUC and DPP are giving sustained priority to major complex cases;

(d) pro forma reporting has been introduced into the RUC for straightforward cases, with the aim of reducing the time taken to submit police case files to the DPP's office;

(e) a "fast stream" system has been established by the DPP to identify and take forward cases which could be brought to trial relatively quickly;

(f) the types of case which may be reported directly from the RUC sub-divisional level to the circuit Assistant Director of Public Prosecutions have been extended;

(g) a provisional committal date will be set when the committal papers are sent from the DPP's office to RUC headquarters rather than when they have been returned duly signed;

(h) a presiding judge has been appointed at Belfast Crown court to oversee the listing of cases, thus discouraging unnecessary delay between committal and trial;

(i) two additional High Court judges and an additional county court judge have been appointed;

(j) twelve additional Queen's Counsel have been appointed, thus significantly increasing the number of senior counsel available for criminal cases;

(k) courtroom accommodation is being used more intensively, through increased sittings and reduced vacations;

(l) in addition, the Government have proposed an amendment to the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 which would allow scheduled cases to be heard other than at Belfast Crown court, thus potentially reducing the pressure on court room accommodation;

(m) the Government have also proposed that the maximum remand interval in scheduled cases should be increased to 28 days, thus further reducing the pressure on court accommodation.

The Government will monitor the effects of these measures to see whether further changes are necessary.

ENERGY

Uranium

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will provide in tabular form details of the gross imports of highly enriched uranium from each foreign source for civil purposes, and the gross exports of highly enriched uranium to each foreign country; and if he will give separate figures in each case for highly enriched uranium of an enrichment of 4·20 per cent., and highly enriched uranium of an enrichment of greater than 20 per cent.

Mr. Goodlad: High enriched uranium is defined by Euratom and by the International Atomic Energy Agency as uranium enriched to 20 per cent. or more in the isotope U-235. This definition is used in the United Kingdom. Since May 1979, transfers of high enriched uranium in larger than gram quantities have been:

	Kg
Exports	1,356

These amounts include about 150kg temporarily held in transit in the United Kingdom. The following countries have been involved in transactions totalling more than 1kg:

Imports
Federal Republic of Germany
Netherlands
United States of America
Japan

Exports
Australia
Chile
Federal Republic of Germany
France
United States of America
Venezuela

Details relating to individual countries cannot be disclosed for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Power Stations

Mr. McGuire asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list in the Official Report for each of the power stations listed in his reply to the hon. Member for Makerfield on 2 December, Official Report, columns 544-45, what rated output of electricity was used in the original calculation of net effective cost when approval for construction was given; what is the present rated output of each station; whether the net effective cost per kilowatt has been recalculated to take account of any relevant downrating; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report for each of the power stations listed in his reply to the hon. Member for Makerfield on 2 December, Official Report, columns 544-45, what additional capital expenditure has been incurred on improving safety features since construction was completed; whether the net effective cost of each station has been recalculated to take account of such additional expenditure; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list in the Official Report for each of the power stations listed in his reply to the hon. Member for Makerfield on 2 December, Official Report, columns 544-45, the net effective cost in pounds per kilowatt per year (a) as originally calculated when approval for construction was given and (b) as recalculated on the basis of actual cost of construction and actual time of construction; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will list in the Official Report for each of the power stations listed in his reply to the hon. Member for Makerfield, on 2 December, Official Report, columns 544-45, what availability factor was used in the original calculation of net effective cost when approval for construction was given; what are the highest and lowest availability factors recorded for each station since construction; whether the net effective cost of each station has been recalculated to take account of the actual availability achieved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall ask the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to write to the hon. Member.

Highland Fabricators (Contract)

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on which part of the Eider Jacket contract won by Highland Fabricators is being done in Japan; if he will state the precise work being done in that country; and what information he has as to the reason for this work being carried out abroad.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The part of the Eider Jacket contract being done in Japan is the pile clusters (four units); the pre-use work being done is the supply of heavy section plate. The reason for this work being carried out abroad is (a) lowest cost, and (b) guaranteed delivery to suit Highlands Fabricators' requirements.

CEGB (Financial Control Systems)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Energy what action he has taken to strengthen the Central Electricity Generating Board's financial control systems in the light of the observations of Judge Stroyan on 10 December at Teesside Crown court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The offences which gave rise to the case were committed between 1976 and 1982. The Central Electricity Generating Board subsequently introduced revised financial control procedures which were the subject of a satisfactory report by the board's auditors, Peat Marwick, Mitchell and Co. At my right hon. Friend's request the auditors provided a subsequent report which was received earlier this year. Like the previous report, it was undertaken with particular reference to the north-eastern region of the board but was of more general application. In it, the auditors concluded that the board's revised procedures constituted an adequate system of control over contract expenditure.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Rother Valley on 4 December, Official Report, column 740, if he will publish the formal comments made by Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate on exercises of emergency arrangements at (a) Heysham 2 on 18 July, (b) Heysham 2 on 6 November, (c) Hartlepool on 19 November and (d) Dungeness B on 21 November.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Lang), gave on 10 December, at column 174, to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson).

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Rother Valley on 4 December, Official Report, column 740, whether the exercises observed by Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate at each named power station included full exercises performed by all shifts and teams at the station; what proportion of duly authorised persons was observed in the performance of full exercises; what proportion of other personnel was observed in the performance of full exercises; whether the content and duration of exercises observed varied between shifts and teams; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Nuclear Site Liaison Committees

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans to impose a duty on nuclear site liaison committees to hold their meetings in public.

Mr. Goodlad: This is a matter for the liaison committees themselves.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 3 December, Official Report, column 676, whether the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate work on the review of Bradwell is now complete with the exception of a few issues; if the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate still expects to meet the announced target of spring 1987 for publication of its conclusions on the review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986]: Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate's work on the CEGB's long-term review of Bradwell is proceeding. At present, the NII still expects to meet its target of the first half of 1987 for publication of its conclusions on the review.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Conditions)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to announce any plans to improve conditions in prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have already developed and are committed to maintaining a substantial prison building programme, which constitutes the principal means by which physical conditions in prisons are being improved. The programme includes a total of 20 new establishments, three of which have been completed and taken into use, five are being built and the remainder are at various stages of design or planning, including two new schemes which were added to the programme as a result of the Government's recently announced decisions on public expenditure in 1987-88. In addition we are undertaking an extensive programme of modernisation and redevelopment of the existing prison estate with major capital work in progress or planned at about 100 establishments. Benefits for both staff and inmates will also flow from our fresh start proposals for improved working arrangements, pay systems and management structures, which are the subject of discussions with the Prison Officers Association and the other prison service trade unions.

BBC

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedures he follows to ensure that the BBC fulfils its obligations.

Mr. Mellor: It is for the board of governors of the BBC to ensure that the corporation fulfils its obligations on programming and other matters.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the latest crime statistics.

Mr. Mellor: In 1985 the police recorded 3·6 million notifiable offences in England and Wales, an increase of 3 per cent. over 1984. This was below the average increase (5·7 per cent.) over the years 1950-1985. In the 12-month period from October 1985-September 1986 the police recorded 3·8 million notifiable offences in England and Wales, an increase of 6 per cent. over the previous 12 months. This is in line with the average increase for previous years.

Police (Freemasonry)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on progress in implementing his policy towards police officer membership of masonic institutions; how many police officers are known to be members of such institutions; in which divisions and departments they are; if any action has been taken in respect of them; if any staff resources are currently devoted to investigating such links; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that his policy — which we fully support — is to ensure that Metropolitan police officers are in no doubt as to their obligation both to be and to be seen to be impartial. Advice on freemasonry is contained in "The Principles of Policing and Guidance for Professional Behaviour", which is issued to all members of the force. No staff resources are devoted to establishing the numbers of police officers who are freemasons and no information is available on this or the other matters about which the hon. Member asks.

Mr. Roy Garner

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis showing all oral and verbal recommendations by his officers for reward payments from private sources to Mr. Roy Garner; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to whether any new oral or verbal recommendations for a reward payment from private sources to Mr. Roy Garner have been made by his officers; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis about the alleged bribe and death threat made by a senior police officer to Superintendent Gerald Wiltshire, and the threat to the career prospects of two police officers under Superintendent Wiltshire's supervision and as to what action was taken in response to these matters when reported; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has appointed the chief constable of South Yorkshire to investigate the allegations made in the "World in Action" TV programme on 3 November 1986. The investigation is being supervised by the Police Complaints Authority. The Commissioner has stated that Mr. Wright will have full access to all documents relating to earlier investigations. It would not be right for me to seek to intervene while the matter is under investigation.

AIDS

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons in the United Kingdom that have in-patient facilities for treatment of AIDS sufferers.

Mr. Mellor: At the present time there is no diagnosed case of AIDS among the prison population. Inmates who develop AIDS and are ill will be removed to a National Health Service hospital for such treatment as is required and will stay there for as long as the specialist facilities of the National Health Service hospital are needed. If their condition remits and they return to prison such inmates will initially be placed in a selected prison hospital where it will be for the medical officer in charge to decide on the appropriate management of the case. The prison department has contingency plans to provide special care facilities in selected strategically situated establishments in case of need, and the use of such facilities would be an option open to the medical officer. Accommodation at Brixton prison and Risley remand centre is already available for such use and accommodation at other establishments is being considered for use in the longer term as and when necessary.

Prisons (Health Checks)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what health checks are made by prison doctors on new inmates coming into prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: All inmates on first reception are questioned about specific aspects of their health and are examined by the medical officer on the day of reception or as soon as possible on the following day.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what disciplinary action is taken against a Metropolitan police officer who accesses the police national computer but fails to record the fact that he has done so.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am advised by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the action taken would depend on the circumstances of the case. It could range from a warning about future conduct to criminal proceedings.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the number of police national computer terminals that his answer of 18 November, Official Report, column 90, relates to; whether the policy and checking procedure announced in that answer applies to all computer terminals in the Metropolitan police force area that can obtain information from the police national computer; and if he will break down the figure given in his answer of 2 December, Official Report, column 572, by division and administrative units.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the policy and procedures set out in my answer of 18 November at column 90 relates to all accesses from the 68 dedicated police national computer terminals in his force and from the 157 terminals in his force which are connected by a standard link to the PNC.

I regret that the figure for the number of accesses in August 1986 which was given in my answer to the hon. Member of 2 December at column 572 was incorrect. The total number of accesses (inquiries plus update transactions) to the police national computer by the Metropolitan police during August 1986 was 398,552. It is not possible to break down this figure by division and administrative units as statistical records are not kept in this form.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from chief constables to establish the practice of police forces other than the Metropolitan police in requiring records to be kept of requests for access to the police national computer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A system of automatic logging of accesses to the police national computer is used by 20 forces; other forces keep manual records. The police national computer board is considering whether the system of automatic logging should be mandatory for all forces.

Chief officers were advised to re-examine their procedures for logging accesses to the police national computer in Home Office circular 47/1986, a copy of which is in the Library, and the matter is also being considered by the working party which is producing a code of practice for police computer systems under section 36(4) of the Data Protection Act 1984. In these circumstances, we see no need to call for reports from chief constables.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 201, about the replacement strategy for the police national computer, if he will explain how the operational requirements are going to be communicated to possible suppliers; when this is likely to take place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A distinction must be drawn between the operational specification referred to in my answer of 19 November, at column 201 and an operational requirement, which is much less detailed.

The operational requirement resulting from the replacement strategy for the police national computer will be made available to all potential suppliers through the usual government procurement procedures and in accordance with the appropriate EEC/GATT regulations which include the placing of an advertisement in the EEC Journal. This will take place once the replacement strategy has been determined.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he proposes to make to ensure that the operational requirements for the replacement police national computer (a) meet police needs, (b) represent the best value for money and (c) do not breach data protection requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The operational requirement for the replacement police national computer will be agreed by the police national computer board, which includes representatives of the Home Office, the police service, police authorities and independent advisers from the private sector. The equipment will be procured by open competition and we are satisfied that these arrangements will ensure that it both meets police needs and represents best value for money.

The police service is preparing a code of practice for police computer systems, in consulation with the Data Protection Registrar, under the provisions of section 36(4) of the Data Protection Act 1984. Both the existing and the replacement police national computer will be subject to the provisions of this code of practice.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mr. Ground asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much of the additional money being provided for the criminal injuries compensation scheme in 1987-88 he estimates will be spent on additional staff;

(2) how many additional officers he estimates will be engaged by the Criminal Injuries Compensation board as a result of the additional funds being provided for the criminal injuries compensation scheme in 1987;

(3) how many cases he estimates the Criminal Injuries Compensation board will resolve during the year 1987-88;

(4) what he estimates, on the basis of the planned expenditure on the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, the current level of new cases and the backlog of cases awaiting resolution by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board will be at the end of 1987-88.

Mr. Mellor: The Government's plans make provision for the resolution of some 49,500 applications in 1987-88, which it is estimated will leave about 63,000 cases awaiting resolution at the end of March 1988. These plans involve the addition of about 100 staff at a cost of around £800,000 in 1987-88.

Rape

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men convicted of rape and subsequently released from prison have been reconvicted of the same offence in each year since 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The only information readily available which relates to a sample of adult males discharged from prison department establishments in 1981 is for those discharged from a sentence for any sexual offence. About 3 per cent. of those so discharged were convicted of another sexual offence within two years. Results of this study were published in tables 8(h) and 8(i) of "Prison Statistics England and Wales 1984" (Cmnd. 9622).

Prisons (Damage)

Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of damage caused to prisons by inmates during the year to July 1986.

Mr. Mellor: Separate records of damage caused by inmates are kept only in cases of major disturbance; otherwise the cost of repair is included in the day-to-day maintenance costs of prison department establishments. The information requested is not therefore available.

"Arts and Disabled People" (Report)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust concerning the recommendations of "Arts and Disabled People", the report of a committee of inquiry under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Attenborough; what action he has taken or will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Representatives of the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust were invited by the Home Office to take part in discussions together with other organisations representing disabled people to produce acceptable guidance on access for disabled people to cinemas. The trust is one of the organisations which will be consulted when similar guidance is being considered for other premises.

Interport Lists

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the purpose of the interport lists circulated within the immigration service; if he will place a copy of interport list 213/86 in the Library; and what criteria are observed in placing names of individuals or organisations on interport lists.

Mr. Waddington: The interport list is a means of transmitting to ports of entry a variety of operational information and instructions, including action to be taken in individual cases. The criterion for inclusion is a requirement to bring the information to the notice of operational staff at the earliest possible opportunity. It would not be right to place this type of information in the Library.

Leeds-Bradford Airport

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete his review of the Immigration (Ports of Entry) Order, especially with regard to designating Leeds-Bradford airport as a port of entry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: A review of the Immigration (Ports of Entry) Order is approaching completion. I expect to be able to announce the outcome early in the new year.

Burglaries

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statistics are available to him relating to the number of burglaries carried out by persons who have been remanded on bail to await trial for a similar offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The information available relates to the year 1978 and was published in table 11 of the Home Office statistical bulletin 22/81, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

H Wing, Durham Prison

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what grounds exercise has been reduced fom one hour a day to half an hour a day for women in H wing, Durham prison.

Mr. Mellor: Exercise in the open air on weekdays for prisoners in H wing, Durham was reduced to half an hour a day when new gymnasium facilities were taken into use, allowing indoor exercise. These are available to the prisoners for two hours on Tuesday and Thursday mornings and two hours on alternate Saturdays.

Prisoners (Bibles)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what financial resources are allocated to make provision for copies of the Bible to be made available for each prison inmate who requests one during the financial year 1987-88;

(2) what steps have been taken to ensure that sufficient funds are available to supply copies of the Bible to all prison inmates who request one during the remaining months of the current financial year;

(3) whether copies of the Bible are freely given to all prison inmates if they make such a request of the prison chaplain.

Mr. Mellor: A copy of the Bible is normally made available to any inmate who asks for it for the period of his stay in prison. Earlier in the year reserve stocks of new Bibles became exhausted, but funds have now been made available to purchase additional Bibles and distribute them to establishments before the end of the financial year. Financial allocations for 1987-88 have not yet been approved.

Metropolitan Police Instruction Book

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give the reasons for the amendment issued on 4 November to chapter 6, paragraph 9(1) of the Metropolitan police instruction book, regarding collaboration between police officers in the making of their notes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultations were carried out with regard to the amendment issued on 4 November to chapter 6, paragraph 9(1) of the Metropolitan police instruction book in particular, and whether those consulted included the Bar Council, the Law Society, the Criminal Bar Association and the Crown Prosecution Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am advised by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the instruction book was amended in order to remove the distinction in making notes between simple and complex cases and to provide for a standard practice. The way in which the police gather and record evidence in individual cases is an operational matter for them to decide, subject to the views of the court of trial. I understand that outside bodies were not consulted.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) of 8 December, Official Report, column 82, what information he has as to whether Dr. Black's recollection of his conversation with Dr. Skuse in May 1975 is also supported by a contemporaneous note; and if he will say when he first received this information.

Mr. Mellor: On 1 December my right hon. Friend received from my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) various documents relating to the review of the safety of the convictions in the Birmingham pub bombings case. These included a transcript of the "World in Action" programme to be broadcast that evening in which Dr. Black refers to notes which he took when he saw Dr. Skuse. Also included was an affidavit by Dr. Black in which he refers to having noted at the time his coversation with Dr. Skuse and to having summarised the details in a letter which he sent to the defence solicitors on 11 June 1975. A copy of the letter was attached to the affidavit.

Unclaimed Vehicles

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 8 December to the hon. Member for Leicester, East, Official Report, columns 77-78, regarding unclaimed vehicles, for how long unclaimed vehicles are held; how they are disposed of; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Where a vehicle which has been removed to a car pound is not claimed within seven days, the police follow the procedures laid down in the Removal and Disposal of Vehicles Regulations 1986. A notice is sent to the address of the last known keeper of the vehicle, and where no response is received within the next 21 days further enquiries are undertaken. If no claim is made, vehicles are sold through auction or for scrap approximately eight weeks after removal.

Mr. Ken McGinley

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations have been received from officers of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association on the subject of alleged monitoring of telephone calls to and from Mr. Ken McGinley, chairman of that organisation; what were the dates of such representations; what reply has been sent; and on what date.

Mr. Hurd Mr. McGinley, chairman of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association wrote to me about this subject on 18 September. I regret that a reply was not sent until 15 December. A copy of this reply has been sent to the hon. Member.

Media Policy (Vienna Conference)

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what role his Department played in the recent Council of Europe conference on mass media policy in Vienna; what implications arose for the United Kingdom; what resolutions were adopted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of the conference of European Ministers on mass media policy.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986]: I represented the United Kingdom at the conference and Home Office officials played a full part in its preparation through the mass media committees of the Council of Europe. The conference adopted two resolutions: on the promotion of European audiovisual production and on public and private broadcasting. The major decision of the conference, the terms of which were proposed by the United Kingdom, was to agree the rapid preparation of a binding convention on transfrontier broadcasting, building on existing Council of Europe instruments. Home Office officials will also play a full part in that work, which I hope can be completed speedily. European broadcasting Ministers agreed to meet again in a second conference in Stockholm in 1988.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for compensation have been made to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each of the last six years.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is published today in the 22nd report of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board (Cm. 42, paragraph 2).

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the level of staffing of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board for each of the last six years.

Mr. Mellor: The number of staff in post at the Board, on 1 April each year from 1981 to 1986, was as follows (part-time staff being each counted as one-half):

Date	Staff in post
1 April 1981	155
1 April 1982	163
1 April 1983	163
1 April 1984	182
1 April 1985	189
1 April 1986	202·5

The number of staff in post on 1 December 1986 was 208·5.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time taken in dealing with applications to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not available on the average length of time taken to deal with applications to the Board. As stated in the Board's annual report for 1985-86, published today (Cm. 42, paragraph 5), 70 per cent. of cases resolved in the last financial year were resolved within a year of application.

Hans Raj

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to give a substantive reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, dated 4 August regarding the case of Hans Raj ref. R: 254009/4(5).

Mr. Waddington: Shortly.

Prisons (AIDS)

Mr. Alex Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals for setting up AIDS treatment units in (a) Brixton prison or (b) elsewhere within the prison system: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Prison Department's contingency plans for AIDS include the provision of special care facilities in selected strategically situated establishments in case of need for inmates who have developed the full disease but whose medical management does not for the time being call for the specialist treatment facilities of the National Health Service. As an interim measure, some accommodation has already been set aside at Brixton prison and Risley remand centre, and similar measures at other establishments are being explored. The possibility of setting up a permanent, purpose-designed care unit of 12 beds at Brixton for patients with AIDS and other infective conditions is being considered.

Greater Manchester (Civil Defence)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the severe financial restrictions the Greater Manchester fire and civil defence authority is facing on both revenue and capital accounts; what representations he has received on the matter; if he will now increase the authority's expenditure limit and capital allocation for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Alan Richard Knowlden (Escape)

Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received the report of the inquiry conducted by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons into the escape of Alan Richard Knowlden from St. Mary's hospital, Paddington, on 8 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The report of the inquiry of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons into this escape is published today (HC 80). I am grateful for the work which he and his colleagues put into the inquiry and for the comprehensive report he has submitted.

The events which occasioned the inquiry were as follows. On 30 March Alan Richard Knowlden, a remand prisoner at Wormwood Scrubs prison, who had been placed provisionally in category A (the highest security category), attacked a prison officer and, in the ensuing scuffle, sustained a broken nose. The medical officer decided that the broken nose required treatment and that Knowlden should be seen by a specialist. The specialist advised an operation within 10 days. This could not be carried out in a prison hospital and arrangements were made for Knowlden to be admitted to St. Mary's hospital, Paddington. On 7 April Knowlden was removed to the hospital. On the morning of 8 April three or four men armed with various weapons broke into the ward where he was located, attacked the escort and escaped with Knowlden.

Her Majesty's Inspector's report records his view, which I endorse, that at the time of the escape the officers who were in charge of Knowlden acted with considerable bravery and determination.

The report describes the procedures relating to the security classification of prisoners and the movement of category A prisoners for medical treatment; and discusses the medical facilities available at HM prison Wormwood Scrubs and in the prison system as a whole. It goes on to describe Knowlden's history and security classification, his conduct in prison, the events which led to the decision to move him to St. Mary's hospital, Paddington, the arrangements for the transfer and the escape. It identifies the factors which may have contributed to the escape and contains 21 recommendations aimed at reducing the risks of such an escape in future.

HM Chief Inspector draws the following main conclusions from his inquiry. The key to the escape lay in the fact that, at the crucial time Knowlden was not being held in the maximum security prison to which he had been remanded but in the relatively insecure conditions of St. Mary's hospital. The instructions which are designed to ensure that transfers to outside hospital are made only as a last resort were not followed, though the report recognises that, even if they had been, the decision to send Knowlden to St. Mary's would probably have been the same. HM Chief Inspector concludes that there was a tendency on the part of staff to apply the prescribed procedures less strictly to some category A prisoners than to others, and he attributes this to the fact that staff, working under pressure and familiar with the problems posed by category A prisoners, had come to see them as varying in escape risk and concentrated their attention on the exceptionally dangerous prisoners such as terrorists, spies and notorious gangsters. He also concludes that the existing instructions are unsatisfactory in a number of respects, for example as regards their accessibility and comprehensiveness; and that the respective responsibilities of medical and non-medical staff need to be clarified. HM Chief Inspector observes that it will not be possible to ensure that a similar escape does not take place again, but that more can be done to deter attempts. His recommendations are framed with this objective in mind.

I accept HM Chief Inspector's conclusions and recommendations, and revised instructions on the security procedures for category A prisoners, which take these recommendations into account, have already been issued.

The escape into which HM Chief Inspector has inquired was a serious breach of security. With the help of his report, the lessons to be learned from the escape have been learned by all concerned and are being translated into action.

Value Added Tax

90. Mr. Sackville asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in connection with the level of value added tax threshold and the effect on employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: A number of representations about the level of the VAT threshold have been received this year, the majority calling for the threshold to be increased. Very few mentioned any effect on employment.

Mr. Robert Sheldon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the increase in revenue for 1986-87 and 1987-88 arising from the introduction of new penalties for late value added tax returns.

Mr. Lawson: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

European Community (Duty-free Sales)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with fellow European Community Ministers about the continuation of duty-free sales within member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Fallon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for the latest years now available, identifiable public expenditure by function in England, Northern Ireland, Scotland, Wales and the United Kingdom expressed (a) in cash terms, (b) as a percentage of United Kingdom total identifiable public expenditure, (c) as an amount per capita and (d) as an amount per capita expressed as a percentage of the United Kingdom amount per capita.

Mr. MacGregor: The term "identifiable expenditure" refers to expenditure that can be identified from official reports as having been incurred in England, Scotland, Wales or Northern Ireland. Total identifiable expenditure accounts for just over 80 per cent. of total departmental public expenditure.

The remaining, unidentifiable expenditure includes expenditure on defence, overseas aid and other overseas services which are deemed to have been incurred on behalf of the United Kingdom as a whole. Also included in this category are Government net lending to, and the market and overseas borrowing of, the public corporations (including the nationalised industries) due to the difficulty in allocating this expenditure between countries.

Tables 1 to 5 show figures of indentifiable public expenditure according to main function in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. These are the only available figures comparing public expenditure by function in the four countries of the United Kingdom. The analysis covers 1981-82 to 1985-86, the only period for which data are available on a consistent basis.

Table 6 compares, for the latest year, 1985-86 expenditure in the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland programmes with the total indentifiable expenditure in the respective countries. It shows that identifiable expenditure has a wider coverage than expenditure within the responsibility of the Secretaries of State in the case of Scotland or Wales, and in the case of Northern Ireland, it has a slightly wider coverage than the Northern Ireland departments in the public expenditure survey. This table also shows total unidentifiable expenditure by function for 1985-86.

In some cases expenditure which cannot be separately identified for England, Scotland or Wales can be allocated to Great Britian and in these circumstances it is appropriate to compare Northern Ireland allocated expenditure with that allocated to Great Britain. Tables 7a and 7b provide this analysis over the five-year period.

The extent to which expenditure can be identified may vary from year to year and between countries. The coverage of particular functions can also vary between countries — for example, in Northern Ireland, expenditure on arts and libraries is contained in the education category.

The tables use the terms and definitions of the last public expenditure White Paper "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1986-87 to 1988-89" (Cmnd 9702) but they incorporate later information.

Taxation

Mr. Squire asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table which sets out for a two-child family on (a) half average earnings, (b) three quarters average earnings, (c) average earnings, (d) one and a half average earnings, (e) twice average earnings, (f) five times average earnings and (g) 10 times average earnings the increase in net income to be derived from (i) a 1p cut in the standard rate of income tax in the 1987-88 financial year, (ii) an increase in personal allowances, over and above indexation, which incurred the same cost as a 1p cut in standard rate income tax, (iii) an increase in child benefit which incurred the same cost as a 1p cut in standard rate income tax, both assuming and not assuming similar increases in the supplementary benefit children's rates, (iv) the introduction of a reduced rate tax band of 25 per cent. at the same cost as a 1p cut in standard rate income tax, showing what band of income the reduced rate would cover and (v) the introduction of a reduced rate tax band of 20 per cent. at the same cost as a 1p cut in standard rate income tax, showing what band of income the reduced rate would cover.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information based on full year direct revenue or expenditure costs at forecast 1987-88 levels is in the table. The income tax calculations assume that all the main personal allowances would be increased by the same percentage. Each of the measures would have a cost of about £1,300 million in a full year at 1987-88 income levels. The income tax changes have been made on top of the illustrative income tax regime resulting from 3·25 per cent. indexation as in "Autumn Statement 1986" (Cmnd. 14). It has also been assumed that the only income tax allowance or relief available to the married couple is the married man's allowance and that the wife has no earnings.

Payroll Giving

Mr. Colvin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will increase the £100 limit on charitable donations qualifying for tax relief under the new payroll giving scheme.

Mr. Lawson: I propose to introduce legislation in the next Finance Bill to increase the annual limit to £120—or £10 a month—with effect from 6 April 1987.

Local Authorities (Capital Projects)

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the financial effects of local authorities undertaking capital projects and arranging leaseback deals with other public sector organisations or companies in which they have a majority interest.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 9 December 1986, c. 137]: Such schemes will in general boost nominal demand in the economy, implying higher interest rates than would otherwise be the case. This will tend to displace capital projects elsewhere in the economy. Whether the net effect is beneficial depends on the commercial viability of the initial project.

Strip Searches

Mr. Madden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what categories of passenger are exempt from being stripped and searched by Customs and Excise staff on arrival at United Kingdom ports of entry; and what action is taken against any passenger who refuses to agree to being stripped and searched.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 15 December 1986, c. 425-26]: Exemption from search is confined to very limited categories of persons falling to be considered under the Diplomatic Privilege Act 1964, the State Immunity Act 1978 or the International Organisations Act 1968. Typically these categories could involve only such as a sovereign or head of state or accredited diplomats and their families.

Any passenger refusing to agree to be searched has the right to be taken before either a superior of the officer requiring the search to be made or a justice of the peace who, if satisfied that the search is justified, will direct accordingly.

Mr. Madden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many men, women and young people aged under 18 years have been stripped and searched by Customs and Excise staff at Leeds/Bradford airport in the current year to date.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 15 December 1986, c. 425-26]: Customs search records do not identify separately those persons who have been stripped and searched or indicate age groups. In the year to date 228 passengers have been searched at Leeds/Bradford airport of whom 179 were male and 49 female.

Mr. Madden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many visitors to the United Kingdom, including those holding a visitor's visa, have been stripped and searched at terminals 3 and 4 at Heathrow airport in the current year to date.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 15 December 1986, c. 425-26]: Customs search records do not identify separately those persons who have been stripped and searched or distinguish between visitors and United Kingdom residents. In the year to date some 7,770 and 4,080 passengers respectively have been searched at terminals 3 and 4 at Heathrow airport.

Mr. Madden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what instructions have been issued to Customs and Excise staff at ports of entry in the United Kingdom concerning the stripping and searching of passengers; and if he will place a copy of such instructions in the Library.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 15 December 1986, c. 425-26]: Customs officers are instructed that power to search passengers is provided for under section 164 of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 where there are reasonable grounds to suspect that dutiable, prohibited or restricted goods are being carried. A copy of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 is already held in the Library. It is not the practice to publish the Department's internal standing instructions.

Mr. Madden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what clothing is available at Leeds/Bradford airport and other ports of entry in the United Kingdom for passengers to wear whilst their own clothing is being searched by Customs and Excise staff.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 15 December 1986, c. 425-26]: At Leeds/Bradford airport and other ports of entry searches by Customs officers are usually conducted step-by-step and in most cases the limited extent of search precludes the need to provide alternative clothing or blankets but such provision is available as required in appropriate cases.

DEFENCE

Chemical Weapons

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report which countries are known to maintain stocks of chemical weapons.

Mr. Stanley: The Soviet Union is capable of engaging in chemical warfare on a very large scale. Among the NATO allies the United States currently possesses a limited retaliatory capability. The French Government have recently announced that France should possess an appropriate deterrent capacity of chemical weapons. A UN fact-finding mission in 1986 has concluded that Iraqi forces used chemical weapons in the Gulf conflict. Worldwide, there may be more than 20 nations which now either possess chemical weapons or are looking at the option of acquiring them. I cannot provide further details on a non-classified basis.

Crown Proceedings Act 1947

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of any information and advice that has been put to Her Majesty's forces following his decision to support repeal of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947.

Mr. Freeman: Initial notification of our decision that section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 should be repealed was signalled to the services on 8 December. This will be followed shortly by more comprehensive guidance which will be incorporated in standing instructions in due course.

It is not our practice to place in the Library copies of internal administrative communications such as these.

Service Personnel (Compensation)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 123, if his Department will pay any compensation that becomes due from one service person to another following a successful claim of negligence.

Mr. Freeman: Where one service man is sued by another for alleged negligence arising out of the execution of his duties my Department will stand behind him and will meet the cost of any damages awarded against him.

DROPS

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the preference of his Department's selection team in the selection of demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system trailists in 1983 as regards a flat flatrack system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Department selected Foden Trucks Ltd. and Scammell Motors as main contractors for the supply of the trails equipment, with Powell Duffryn Ltd. and Multilift (UK) Ltd. being chosen to supply three types of loading handling systems. Messrs Multilift and Marshalls of Cambridge provided three designs of flatracks each. Messrs Craven Tasker and the Boughton Group supplied trailers. Messrs Blatchford and EKA Ltd. provided rail transfer equipment.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish details of briefings on the flat flatrack system given to the United States army and British press at the time of the selection of the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There have been exchanges of information with the United States army on the DROPS logistic concepts and programme and their similar PLS one within the normal collaborative machinery. Information on the programme has been provided by the Department and the firms concerned to the press as appropriate and in response to inquiries.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence when formal research by his Department into the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system was started; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Formal research into the logistic problems and concepts from which DROPS evolved began in 1969 when a study was undertaken by the then Fighting Vehicles Research and Development Establishment.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department's involvement in the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system started; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Work on the concepts from which DROPS evolved began with a study undertaken by the then Fighting Vehicles Research and Development Establishment in 1969.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence what contractors were involved in his Department's formal research into the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system; at what dates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following firms were involved in the Department's consideration of load handling concepts between 1975 and 1982 when the general staff target for DROPS was finalised: Abel Systems, Arlington, CF Coach, EDBRO, Foden, Herncrest Boughton, Multilift, Pengco, Powell Duffryn and Ray Smith. This involvement took the form of supplying equipment for trial, demonstration of equipment or discussions with the Department, or a combination of these.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence at what date formal tasking on the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system was begun by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamiliton: Formal procurement action on DROPS was started in mid-1982 with the approval of the requirement and its presentation to industry.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent the Multilift chain-operated loading system has satisfied the purpose for which it was procured; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A single purchase of Multilift chain-operated loading equipment was made in 1975 to enable the Army to carry out a trial as part of the consideration of load handling concepts and it served for that purpose. It was a different equipment to the one finally selected for the DROPS requirement.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of trialing each of the Multilift flat flatrack systems in each year that such trials took place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The DROPS evaluation trials consisted of extensive field trials in BAOR and, in parallel, detailed engineering trials at RARDE Chertsey. Altogether they lasted a year (July 1984 to June 1985). They involved the total range of chosen equipment options and vehicle combinations of load handling systems. Trialing costs of individual systems cannot be identified separately.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Multilift chainlift system procured in 1975 is able to pick-up a load in off-road conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Multilift chainlift equipment purchased in 1975 was not found to be suitable for all the situations in which the Army would need to use such a system in the field.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all defence contractors involved in providing to his Department what is now referred to as DROPS equipment; at what dates they were involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The principal contractors now involved in providing DROPS equipment are: Foden Trucks Ltd.; Leyland Vehicles (Scammell Motors) as main contractors; Multilift (UK) Ltd.; Marshalls of Cambridge; EKA Ltd.; King Trailers Ltd. With the exception of King Trailers, these companies' involvement with the full DROPS procurement programme dates from the 1982-83 competition. King Trailers entered the programme following a further subcontract competition for the production order held last year.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence what were the reasons for preferring a flat flatrack system for the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system in 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Multilift Mk II (low lift) system was one of three load handling systems chosen in 1983 for further DROPS trials and evaluation. Its potential operating advantages were that, with no A frame, the flatracks offered larger load bed area, and access from all four sides; they could be picked up from either end; they could be stacked more easily when unloaded; they were simpler and lighter in construction than other flatrack designs; and they could thus be more easily concealed on the battlefield.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations regarding the problem of visibility in the flat flatrack demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system were made to his Department by Boughtons in 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Boughton's proposals in the 1982-83 competition envisaged the need for a rear loading system with single point connection in a position clearly visible to the operator.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment was made by (a) Boughton and (b) his Department in 1982 of the suitability for rough terrain use of the flat flatrack demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system options; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Both Boughton's and the Department's assessments in the 1982-83 competition recognised the difficulties which might arise in flat flatrack (low lift) operations in rough terrain. The Department concluded, however, that, in view of the significant potential advantages offered by the system, it merited further trial and evaluation alongside two other high lift systems.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the reasons for the non-selection of the flat flatrack demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system after the 1984-85 trials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Extended trials of the flat flatrack DROPS system confirmed the advantages foreseen earlier. However, they also indicated that they would be outweighed by practical difficulties in achieving consistent first-time hook connection and vehicle stability problems when dealing with asymmetric part loads.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify the shortcomings in Boughton's appreciation of technical factors and risks which led him to reject its system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Boughton's proposals figured fully in the final stages of the Department's assessment process in the 1982-83 procurement competition. In the final outcome competing proposals were judged preferable on a balance of technical and economic grounds.

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the selected DROPS MMLC truck designs proposed by Foden and Scammell in 1982 provided sufficient engine power to pull the fully laden LMLC trailer; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when the need for the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system was first formally identified by his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when funds for the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system were first put into his Department's budgeted expenditure; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what were the shortcomings identified by his Department in the Boughton 1982 demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system proposal; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what requirements on stacking flatracks was included in the 1985 specification against which the definitive demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system equipment was tendered; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what part the issue of flatrack stacking played in Multilift's 1982 demountable rack off-loading pick-up system proposal; and if he will make a statement;

(7) what weight was given by the demountable rack off-loading pick-up system selection team to stackability of flatracks; and if he will make a statement;

(8) what assessment was made by the 1982 demountable rack off-loading pick-up system selection team of the implications of the stacking of loaded flatracks for the size of field storage areas; and if he will make a statement;

(9) what assessment was made by his Department in 1980 of the implications of the stacking of loaded flatracks for the space required in storage areas; and if he will make a statement;

(12) if those companies involved in 1982 provided drawings of their proposed load handling systems drawn onto the prime contractor's chassis under consideration for the demountable rack off-loading pick-up system; and if he will make a statement;

(13) what representations were received from any demountable rack off-loading pick-up system prime contractors in 1982 on Multilift's presentation and management; and if he will make a statement;

(13A) what was the nature of such drawings as Multilift produced via the main contractors in 1982 in connection with demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system; and if he will make a statement;

(14) what allocations were introduced into the equipment produced for trials in 1984 after its feasibility study response in 1982; and if he will make a statement;

(15) what was the weight (a) originally estimated by Multilift for its Mk. II flat flatrack system and (b) of the equipment built; and if he will make a statement;

(16) when the decision was taken by his Department that the requirement for low mobility demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system was to be provided by the use of a trailer; and if he will make a statement;

(17) what were the main conclusions of the project carried out by his Department into how the low mobility transport role after the introduction of demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system would be carried out; and if he will make a statement;

(18) to what degree of detail the selected main contractors and subcontractors proposed designs and analysis of a trailer for demountable rack off-load and pick-up system LMLC; and if he will make a statement;

(19) if Boughton's put forward detailed proposals for, and recommendations on, a trailer as the preferred solution for demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system LMLC; and if he will make a statement;

(20) whether the trailers proposed by the selected main contractors and subcontractors met the stated requirement for LMLC demountable racking off-loading and pick-up system in respect of one-man operation and maximum loading; and if he will make a statement;

(21) what assessment was made by his Department in reviewing the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system feasibility study in 1983 of the implications for road traffic law of trailer/truck combinations selected to fulfil the low mobility demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system role on the roads; and if he will make a statement;

(22) what was the gross weight of (a) Boughton's 1982 proposed demountable rack off-loading and demountable system LMLC truck/trailer combination and (b) the combinations selected; and if he will make a statement;

(23) what proposal was made at the time of the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system submissions in 1982 by the two selected contractors as to the most cost-effective way of meeting the stated requirements for the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I shall answer shortly.

AWACS

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the United States Government regarding the choice of airborne early warning system currently being made by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

SCOTLAND

Labour Statistics

88. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of unemployment in Scotland at the latest available date; and what the figures were for June 1979.

Mr. Lang: On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of unemployed claimants in Scotland was 359,236. In June 1979 the corresponding figure was 166,986. The figures are not comparable due to the various changes which have taken place in the compilation of the statistics.

89. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people under the age of 25 years are currently unemployed in Lothian region.

Mr. Lang: On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of unemployed claimants under the age of 25 years in Lothian region was 17,926. This information is available in the Library.

Housing Starts and Completions

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses have been started and completed in the public and private sector in Greenock and Port Glasgow, and Strathclyde region as a whole in each year since 1979.

Mr. Ancram: Details of public and private sector houses started and completed in Strathclyde region for the years in question are provided in the table. The information held centrally does not identify areas other than district council areas or their aggregates. However, information for Inverclyde district, which includes Greenock and Port Glasgow, is also shown.

HMI (Colleges of Education)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide information, for Her Majesty's inspectorate in Scotland, on how many present inspectors have worked as staff in a college of education and for how long, showing separate figures for those inspectors involved in the inspection of Aberdeen college of education during 1984 to 1986.

Mr. John MacKay: There are 29 HM inspectors of schools who have worked in Scottish colleges of education for periods ranging from one year to 12 years. The inspection of Aberdeen college of education involved 10 of these inspectors, among others, and their college of education experience ranged from two to nine years.

Afforestation (Grants)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the numbers and amounts of grants given to private afforestation companies in each year since 1975.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why the levels of forestry planting grants pay no regard to the number of acres being planted.

Mr. John MacKay: The levels of grants under the Forestry Commission's grant schemes do, in fact, vary according to the area of the planting or of the woodland, with higher grants being given for smaller areas.

Tree Planting

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the proportions of deciduous trees to conifers planted, respectively, in the private and public sectors.

Mr. John MacKay: In the year ended 31 March 1986, the private sector planted or restocked 21,017 hectares with conifers and 2,341 hectares with broadleaves under the Forestry Commission's grant schemes (in Scotland, 18,422 hectares and 429 hectares, respectively). The commission itself planted or restocked 11,268 hectares with conifers and 362 hectares with broadleaves (in Scotland, 7,289 hectares and 112 hectares, respectively). The areas of broadleaved woodland planted or restocked by the private sector and the commission represented increases of 42 per cent. and 84 per cent., respectively over the previous year (72 per cent. and 93 per cent. in Scotland). It is expected that the planting of broadleaves will continue to increase as the initiatives announced by the Government in July 1985 take full effect.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek to introduce planning controls in respect of planting of trees on high land.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to introduce such controls.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to extend the powers of the regional advisory committee concerning tree planting schemes.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission's regional advisory committees are advisory and have no powers as such.

Forestry Commission (Land Bank)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish details of the land bank held by the Forestry Commission for future afforestation.

Mr. John MacKay: This information was published in appendix VIII (tables 15 to 17) to the "Forestry Commission's Annual Report and Accounts 1985-86" (HC 554), a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House.

Drink-Driving

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many motorists were charged with drink-driving offences in the latest year for which figures are available; how many of these were convicted; and of those convicted how many had previous convictions for similar offences.

Mr. Lang: In 1985, 12,514 persons were proceeded against for drunk driving, of whom 12,269 had the charge proved against them. Statistics on previous convictions are not available.

Motorways

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total length of all motorways presently in use and under construction in Scotland; and what proportion is (a) presently lit and (b) planned to be lit.

Mr. Ancram: There are currently 159 miles of motorway in use in Scotland, and a further two miles are under construction. Of the total in use, 22 miles (approximately 14 per cent.) are lit. There are no plans to light the stretch of motorway under construction, but it is planned to provide lighting on another five miles of existing motorway.

Road-Related Projects

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the underspend by his Department on road-related projects in the current year.

Mr. Ancram: Capital expenditure on motorway and trunk roads is expected to exceed £96·5 million, out of a total provision of £98 million; total expenditure, including maintenance, is expected to correspond closely to provision.

Fatal Road Accidents (Costs)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated average cost of a fatal road accident in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: £204,200 at 1985 prices. A description of the way in which the cost is estimated is contained in "Road Accidents, Scotland, 1985," a copy of which is in the Library.

Road Accidents and Injuries (Alcohol)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many road accidents and road injuries in Scotland each year are attributable to the effects of alcohol.

Mr. Ancram: It is not possible to estimate the total number of injury road accidents attributable to the effects of alcohol since comprehensive information is not held centrally on the breath or blood alcohol levels of those involved. However, the numbers of accidents in which at least one of the drivers or riders involved is known to have been over the legal limit, and the numbers of casualties, were as follows:

Accidents	1,205	516
Casualties	1,791	764

[1] January to June (provisional).

Scottish Transport Group

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total value of grants paid by Her Majesty's Government to the Scottish Transport Group for employing people in the road passenger transport industry, listing such grants to individual transport group subsidiary companies.

Mr. Ancram: I understand from the Scottish Transport Group that it expects to receive a total of around £60,000 in the present calendar year in grants from the Manpower Services Commission arising from the group's participation in the youth training scheme. Most of the young people involved are placed with the Scottish Bus Group Engineering Limited; a more precise breakdown for all Scottish Transport Group subsidiaries is not readily available.

Elections (Form RPF9)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when form RPF9 under the Representation of the People (Scotland) Regulations 1986 will be available for the use of electoral registration officers and electors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The new form RPF9, for use by an elector applying for an absent vote at an election held on or after 16 February 1987, will be available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office by the end of December.

Trunk Roads (Cats Eyes)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of trunk road in Scotland do not carry cats eyes; and what proportion this is of the total mileage of trunk roads in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: Most of the Scottish trunk road network is equipped with cats eyes. Up-to-date information on this and other features of the network has been collected as part of a recent survey, but until the data have been analysed I am unable to give precise figures.

Farmers

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farmers in Scotland are owner-occupiers; and how many tenant farmers there are farming over three hectares.

Mr. John MacKay: At the June 1986 agricultural census in Scotland there were 17,329 wholly owned farms, while there were 9,915 wholly rented farms of over three hectares.

"Arts and Disabled People" (Report)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust concerning the recommendations of "Arts and Disabled People", the report of a committee of inquiry under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Attenborough; what action he has taken or will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend received a copy of the report. Two meetings with representatives of the Carnegie council have since been held to discuss questions arising from it, relating to education, arts, training, access and local authority and health board services in Scotland.

My right hon. and learned Friend will keep under review the development of the recommendations made in the report where these are consistent with established policies and relationships between himself and the statutory and voluntary bodies concerned.

Hotel Classification Scheme

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Scotland where are the short-term and long-term policies, respectively, of the hotel classification scheme of the Scottish Tourist Board.

Mr. Lang: I understand from the board that the immediate objectives for the scheme have been achieved. The voluntary scheme, applying to all accommodation sectors and incorporating verified classification and grading, was successfully launched in 1985. A positive response has been received from accommodation operators and the results of the first inspections have been incorporated in the 1987 season brochures. The board's longer term policy is to ensure that the customer has a guaranteed official assessment of the range of facilities and services provided (classification) and the quality of services provided (grading). In this way, the customer will be well placed to determine if he is getting value for money compared with competitor destinations which operate similar schemes. The scheme also aims to help increase the stock of good quality accommodation in Scotland by providing an incentive to operators to improve their product.

Housing (Grants and Loans)

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a revised edition of the guidance notes issued with details of crofter housing grants and loans in order to provide intending applicants with more extensive information about the criteria to be applied in assessing applications.

Mr. John MacKay: The preparation of revised guidance notes is in hand.

Hill Farming Review

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the annual hill farming review.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Pollution

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland, 1 December, Official Report, column 523, he will list the works in Scotland operating land-based flaring systems which are currently registered with Her Majesty's industrial air pollution inspectorate; and what controls he exercises over sea-based flaring systems.

Mr. Ancram: In Scotland the following premises registered under section 9 of the Alkali and Works Regulation Act 1906 (a relevant statutory provision of the Health and Safety at Work Etc. Act 1974) operate land-based flaring systems.

BP Petroleum Development Ltd, Sullom Voe Shetland
Occidental Petroleum (Caledonia) Ltd, Flotta Orkney
Britoil PLC, Nigg Ross-shire Shell UK Ltd, Mossmorran
Exxon Chemicals Olefins Inc, Mossmorran
BP Oil Development Ltd, Kinneil Kerse, Grangemouth
BP Oil, Grangemouth Refinery, Grangemouth
BP Chemicals Ltd, Grangemouth
Enichem Elastomers Ltd, Grangemouth

The control of sea-based flaring systems. is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Training

9. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Paymaster General what arrangements have been made for payment of the allowance to participants in the job training scheme; and if they will be counted as unemployed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the administrative arrangements outlined in my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Wainwright) on 9 December at column 115. The normal practice of successive Governments has been not to count people as unemployed when they are undertaking full-time courses of vocational training.

Management Training

11. Mr. Hoyle asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the Manpower Services Commission's role in management training.

Mr. Lee: Effective management training is an essential element in ensuring the competitiveness of British industry. Employers have the primary responsibility for training and developing their own managers. Although the Manpower Services Commission has a key role to play in helping to achieve improvements, as with all aspects of vocational education and training.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

16. Mr. Chapman asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement about the progress of the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Trippier: The enterprise allowance scheme continues to flourish. By the end of November 1986 191,145 previously unemployed people had entered the scheme and over 71,000 are currently receiving the allowance.

Recent survey information shows that 54 per cent. of entrants to the scheme are still trading in their enterprise allowance scheme business three years after start-up. For every 100 businesses continuing at that stage, survey evidence indicates that 39 additional people have been taken on as employees.

24. Mr. Hickmet asked the Paymaster General what is the latest figure for applicants for the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Trippier: By the end of November the enterprise allowance scheme had assisted 191,145 previously unemployed people set up in self-employment. This includes 3,331 people who entered the pilot scheme between January 1982 and July 1983.

45. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to extend the enterprise allowance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Since the introduction of the enterprise allowance scheme, up to the end of November 1986, 191,145 people have been helped to set up in business. The success of the scheme has led to the number of places being expanded from 86,000 in the financial year 1986-87 to 100,000 in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

55. Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Paymaster General how much money has so far been spent on the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Trippier: From the beginning of the pilot scheme in January 1982 to the end of November 1986, £306 million has been spent on the enterprise allowance scheme. This includes £13·5 million in administration costs.

62. Mr. Hayes asked the Paymaster General if he has any figures to indicate how many of those people who started their businesses on the enterprise allowance scheme are still in business after two years.

Mr. Trippier: The latest survey results show that 68 per cent. of entrants are still trading in their enterprise allowance scheme business 18 months after start-up and 54 per cent. are still trading in their scheme business three years after start-up.

Self-employment

18. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to encourage graduates to start their own businesses.

Mr. Trippier: Many graduates possess the skills and aptitudes that are needed to run a business successfully. The Manpower Services Commission runs several programmes to encourage and help graduates and others considering going into business. My right hon. and noble Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science will be meeting a group of university vice-chancellors and polytechnic directors on 27 January to discuss enterprise and higher education.

We also plan to send a leaflet to all undergraduates drawing their attention to the options of self-employment or running their own business when they complete their courses and describing the range of advice and assistance available to them.

58. Mr. Hirst asked the Paymaster General what is his latest estimate of the number of self-employed in the United Kingdom; how this compares with the number in May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: In June 1986 there were an estimated 2,745,000 self-employed in the United Kingdom. This compares with 1,925,000 in June 1979 (estimates are not available for May).

The labour force surveys indicate that the numbers in self-employment have risen continually during the period specified.

Labour Statistics

19. Mr. Flannery asked the Paymaster General if he will give the figures for unemployment in the Sheffield travel-to-work area for each year from 1979 to 1986.

Mr. Lee: The following table shows the numbers of unemployed registrants in the Sheffield travel-to-work area as defined in 1978 for October 1979, 1980, 1981 and 1982. The number of unemployed claimants in that area are also given for October 1982 and 1983. Figures for October of each year since 1983 are also given according to the 1984 definition of the travel-to-work area. Comparisons over the period 1979 to 1986 are difficult to make because of changes in the method of collection and compilation of the data.

Unemployed registrants in the Sheffield travel-to-work area (as defined in 1978)

	Numbers
October 1979	14,203
October 1980	23,100
October 1981	38,063
October 1982	42,554

Unemployed claimants in the Sheffield travel-to-work area (as defined in 1978)

	Numbers
October 1982	39,367
October 1983	41,681

Unemployed claimants in the Sheffield travel-to-work area (as defined in 1984)

	Numbers
October 1983	41,869
October 1984	43,946
October 1985	44,915
October 1986	47,030

29. Mr. Canavan asked the Paymaster General what is the total number of unemployed people in the United Kingdom.

65. Mr. Latham asked the Paymaster General whether he will make a statement on the current level of unemployment.

Mr. Lee: On 9 October 1986 the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 3,237,154.

35. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Paymaster General what is the latest trend in the unemployment figures; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The latest figures indicate that the trend in unemployment turned downward about three months ago. It is difficult to quantify the trend, so close to the turning point, but in the three months to October the seasonally adjusted series fell by nearly 19,000 a month on average.

50. Mr. Hunter asked the Paymaster General what are the latest unemployment figures for the Basingstoke travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lee: On 9 October 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the Basingstoke and Alton travel-to-work area was 3,756.

56. Mr. Knox asked the Paymaster General how many people were out of work in the Staffordshire, Moorlands parliamentary constituency at the most recent count.

Mr. Lee: On 9 October 1986 the number of unemployed claimants in the Staffordshire, Moorlands parliamentary constituency was 3,406.

68. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Paymaster General how many protests he has received, and from what bodies, concerning the changes made in the method of counting the number of people unemployed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: During the past 12 months, my Department has received 20 letters expressing concern about changes which the writers claimed affected the unemployment figures.

Three were from local authorities, the rest from individuals. I do, of course, receive frequent politically motivated protests in this House.

71. Mr. Evans asked the Paymaster General what is his estimate of the effect to date of changes made in 1986 in the methods of counting the unemployed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There has been one change in compilation during 1986 which, from March, reduced an unintended over-recording by about 50,000 on average and therefore improved the accuracy of the figures.

Hotel Classification Scheme

20. Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Paymaster General what progress he is making with the voluntary hotel classification scheme.

Mr. Trippier: The scheme is being operated by the English, Scottish and Wales tourist boards. To date some 8,500 establishments in England and a further 3,500 in Scotland and Wales have applied for classification under the scheme. The scheme will be launched publicly in January 1987.

Local Enterprises

21. Mr. Bellingham asked the Paymaster General if he will give the latest figures for the number of local enterprises that have been set up.

Mr. Trippier: There are currently 354 local enterprise agencies throughout the United Kingdom, of which 284 are approved under the terms of the Finance Act 1982 which allows business sector sponsors tax relief on their contributions to such bodies.

Adult Training

22. Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Paymaster General what progress has been made on the adult training strategy.

Mr. Trippier: During 1986 the Manpower Services Commission has continued to progress the adult training strategy in three main ways: first, through promoting more positive attitudes to training and awareness of the means for taking action; secondly, through projects to enhance the effectiveness of the training infrastructure and systems; and, thirdly, through programmes to make an immediate contribution to the supply of skills in current and future demand.

Much has been done to encourage closer partnership between employers and training institutions. Several initiatives now exist to enhance the effectiveness of the role played by employers, training institutions and representative agencies in the training system.

40. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Paymaster General what new measures he expects to introduce to improve adult training.

Mr. Trippier: Our adult training programmes are frequently reviewed to ensure that they meet the needs of the labour market and represent good value for money. Changes are announced whenever decisions are taken.

77. Mr. Fatchett asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to increase adult training facilities.

Mr. Trippier: This year it is planned that over 250,000 people will benefit from a wide variety of programmes. Twice the number helped in 1983-84. In addition, a number of initiatives seek to make employers, individuals and training providers more aware of the need for relevant and cost-effective training.

YTS

23. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Paymaster General how many young people have now completed YTS courses.

Mr. Trippier: Under one-year YTS, which ran between 1 April 1983 and 31 March 1986, 1,166,255 people started in schemes. Up to 31 October 1986 there have been 548,704 completers.

Since the introduction of two-year YTS on 1 April 1986 up to 31 October 1986 there have been 315,357 entrants, but it is too early to say how many will complete their training.

44. Sir John Farr asked the Paymaster General what new steps he is taking to promote support for YTS among trade unions.

Mr. Trippier: YTS has the active support of the TUC and large numbers of individual unions. The commission maintains a close liaison with all unions involved in YTS. MSC staff, both at head office and in the field organisation, meet frequently with union officials to develop particular schemes or to discuss particular aspects of YTS.

Unions not currently associated with YTS feature in the commission's ongoing marketing plans. A number of general YTS pamphlets and videos are available for this purpose.

53. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Paymaster General if he will introduce into YTS an element of overseas service in the Third world.

Mr. Trippier: YTS is provided through independent managing agents who are responsible, within the agreed guidelines, for preparing the training programmes they propose to offer to trainees. If a programme is proposed which includes overseas experience, the general rule is that this is acceptable provided that such training forms an integrated part of the programme and there are adequate safeguards covering essential matters such as safety and insurance.

78. Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General when he will respond to the recommendations made by the commissioner of the Manpower Services Commission regarding the YTS.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member of Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) on 3 December 1986 at columns 671-73.

High Technology

25. Mr. Park asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on training for high technology skills.

37. Mr. Faulds asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on training for high technology skills.

Mr. Trippier: Training for high technology skills is of the greatest importance for ensuring this country's economic prosperity. In recognition of this fact one of the key objectives of the Government's adult training strategy is to secure an adequate supply of people with the up-to-date skills to meet the demands of new technology generally.

30. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to the number of job vacancies in high technology industries in the Thames Valley area.

Mr. Lee: An analysis of vacancy statistics by industry group is available in the Library, but is not sufficiently detailed for high technology industries to be separately identified.

North Sea Diving

26. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received from the Diving Medical Advisory Committee regarding regulations applicable to North sea diving.

Mr. Trippier: None. But the Health and Safety Executive is in regular contact with this committee and has received various representations relating wholly or partly to regulations or proposed regulations on this subject.

Tourism

27. Mr. Gale asked the Paymaster General what major tourist attractions have been funded by section 4 grants in the last 12 months.

Mr. Trippier: In the last 12 months, section 4 support has been committed by the English Tourist Board to nine tourist attraction projects with a capital cost of £250,000 or greater. The total capital cost of these projects was £9·8 million, and the total support committed to them was over £900,000. The nine attractions are as follows:

ATTRACTION AND PROJECT ASSISTED

Westminster Abbey
Amalgamation and re-presentation of Abbey Museum and Treasury.

Museum of Modern Art, Oxford
Reconstruction of facade to improve access; provision of better facilities, particularly for disabled.

HMS Warrior
Provision of visitor facilities.

Bar Convent Museum, York
Creation of a museum of the religious history of York and England.

Botanical Gardens, Birmingham
Visitor facilities.

POW Camp 83, Malton
Creation of a museum of modern history 1939-45 and visitor facilities.

Thursford Museum, Fakenham
Enlarged exhibition space, selling space, WC and catering facilities.

Stapeley Water Gardens, Nantwich
Creation of visitor centre.
Rock Gardens Centre, Portsmouth
Provision of indoor leisure complex.

66. Mr. Colvin asked the Paymaster General whether the Manpower Services Commission plans to introduce its jointly sponsored business development programme for small businesses related to tourism into other areas after the pilot scheme takes place in Newcastle early in 1987.

Mr. Trippier: The business development programme for hotel and catering industry employers in Newcastle is recruiting participants for its January start. This programme has its roots in a successful tourism local collaborative project set up by the Northumbria tourist board in June 1984. The LCP programme recognises that needs differ from area to area. It would be inappropriate and might well prove unsuccessful to attempt to transplant this BDP without its roots. However, MSC is keen to disseminate the successful outcomes of LCPs amongst the business and education community. MSC will ensure that other tourism projects throughout the country, including that based at the Dorset institute, are made aware of the BDP so that they may learn from relevant aspects of its experience. I expect that forthcoming computerisation of LCP project records will help in achieving this.

70. Mr. Coombs asked the Paymaster General what information he has on the number of tourists visiting the United Kingdom in 1986 by comparison with previous years.

Mr. Trippier: There were about 10·9 million visits to the United Kingdom by overseas residents in the first nine months of 1986. This compares with a record 11·7 million in the first nine months of 1985 and 10·9 million in the first nine months of 1984.

83. Mr. Butterfill asked the Paymaster General what proposals have been submitted to the European Economic Community Commissioners for better use of European Community funds to assist the development of tourism in general and, in particular, the spread of tourism to economically depressed regions.

Mr. Trippier: The Commission's communication to the Council of 5 February 1986 on Community action in the field of tourism put forward a number of proposals for encouraging the development of tourism within the Community. The Commission stated that it was planning, in collaboration with the member states, to make better use of existing Community financial instruments to assist tourism and particularly to improve its seasonal and geographical distribution. I am not aware of any specific proposals which have been submitted to, or put forward by, the Commission in this respect.

Manufacturing Industry

28. Mr. Duffy asked the Paymaster General how many people are employed in manufacturing industries in the Sheffield travel-to-work area; and how many were employed in manufacturing in the same area in June 1979.

Mr. Lee: Employment statistics for local areas are available only for those dates when censuses of employment are taken. The latest available figures from the 1981 census of employment showed that 90,000 employees were employed in manufacturing industries in the Sheffield travel-to-work area compared with 123,000 in 1978 when the previous census was taken. As results of the 1978 census are not available for the new ward-based travel-to-work areas, the figures relate to the area as defined before the 1984 review.

More up-to-date employment estimates for travel-to-work areas, relating to September 1985, will become available early in the new year. Between censuses, employment statistics are based on small-scale sample inquiries which cannot produce reliable results for areas smaller than regions.

74. Mrs. Golding asked the Paymaster General how many people are presently employed in manufacturing industry; and what were the comparable figures in 1979.

Mr. Lee: In September 1986, there were 5,554,000 employees in employment and self-employed people in manufacturing industries in Great Britain. In September 1979 the figure was 7,242,000.

Northern Region

31. Mr. Fallon asked the Paymaster General how many people left the unemployment register in the northern region in each of the last three months for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: The following table shows the numbers of claimants in the northern region who left the unemployment count in each of the last three months to October 1986.

Month ending	Number
August 14	26,943
September 11	30,729
October 9	36,717

Note: These figures are converted to a standard four and one third week month.

Job Creation (EC Funds)

32. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Paymaster General what cash has been received in the past 12 months from European Community funds to assist in creating new employment opportunities; and how these moneys have been disbursed.

Mr. Lee: During the calendar year 1986 new allocations totalling some £34 million have been approved under the European social fund (ESF) for projects in the United Kingdom taking place in 1986 specifically related to employment creation. In addition, a further £246 million has been approved for other, mainly training, projects in the United Kingdom which are also helping to create new employment opportunities. ESF funds are paid to the sponsors of the particular projects for which assistance is sought. Apart from social fund support, the United Kingdom also receives considerable assistance under the European regional development fund towards projects which help to increase overall employment opportunities.

Housing Benefit

33. Mr. Patchett asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to amend the terms under which people participate in the pilot job training scheme so as to affect their qualification for housing benefit.

Mr. Trippier: Training allowance is paid at an amount equal to unemployment/supplementary benefit in payment immediately before the start of training. It will be increased if benefit would have increased had the person remained unemployed; it will not decrease during training. Participants previously entitled to certificated housing benefit are entitled to standard housing benefit, topped up as appropriate by housing benefit supplement.

Small Businesses

34. Mr. Watts asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received recently in connection with the effect of planning controls on small businesses and start ups.

Mr. Trippier: A wide variety of representations have been received. Many of these have demonstrated the need for the measures set out in the White Papers "Lifting the Burden" (Cmnd. 9571) and "Building Businesses . . . Not Barriers" (Cmnd. 9794), designed to simplify planning controls and speed up applications and appeals. These initiatives and the operation of the planning system are, of course, the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

43. Mr. Norris asked the Paymaster General what steps he proposes to take to encourage small businesses on university campuses.

Mr. Trippier: I welcome the establishment of small businesses on university campuses, particularly where they are part of a science park, as they are able to benefit greatly from links with the university which offer easy access to academic expertise, research equipment and other support services.

I am particularly keen that these small businesses should take full advantage of the range of Government support measures that are available to the sector.

61. Mr. Stevens asked the Paymaster General what recent steps he has taken to discourage late payment of bills owing to small firms.

Mr. Trippier: Our "Payment on Time" booklet is a worthwhile step in encouraging a change of attitude towards good payment practice. I shall keep in mind the possibility of further initiatives in this area.

82. Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General what steps he has taken to assist small businesses in tendering for Government contracts.

Mr. Trippier: The principal requirement in Government purchasing is to obtain the best value for public expenditure. We have encouraged small businesses to compete for Government contracts by publishing advice such as the booklet "Tendering for Government Contracts" and by making Government purchasing procedures more easily understood by small businesses. The central unit on purchasing is charged with improving the effectiveness of Government purchasing and supply, and ensuring that small firms have access to contracts is an essential part of that process. Within the Department of Employment we are ensuring that purchasing staff are aware of the benefits from access to a wider range of suppliers, including small firms.

The Ministry of Defence has recently announced, with my Department, an initiative intended to assist small firms in competing for defence contracts. A small firms advice division has been set up to give advice to small firms and encourage developments within MoD that will help small firms to compete for business. The small firms service will be closely involved in efforts to open up defence contracts in this way.

84. Mr. Woodcock asked the Paymaster General what steps he proposes to take to encourage small businesses in inner city areas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Small firms in inner city areas benefit from the wide range of measures available to small firms generally. These include the enterprise allowance scheme, the loan guarantee scheme and the help and advice of the small firms service and the local enterprise agency movement.

In addition, under our inner cities initiative, we are piloting new approaches to job creation and enterprise through our task forces in eight small English inner city areas. In these eight areas we are paying particular attention to the needs of small businesses. I have recently announced a new arrangement, in co-operation with the Association of British Insurers, to help businesses in the eight areas overcome difficulties in arranging insurance. I am also preparing new proposals to help small businesses in the eight areas to gain more ready access to the finance they need. I am supporting inner city-based enterprise agencies in Birmingham and Bristol, and intend to extend such agencies into the other areas. I have given a grant of £150,000 to the Cleveland youth enterprise centre to support its work in inner-city Middlesbrough.

I have contributed £77,000 to support the headstart programme, under which, in collaboration with the Industrial Society and MSC, we will give access to business training to 3,000 inner city youngsters. We propose to place building contracts in inner cities which provide work experience and training for local residents. Small subcontractors in Handsworth will benefit from the Broughton road contract recently awarded to Tarmac as the first of these arrangements. I have also given a grant of £50,000 in Birmingham for a scheme under which experienced business men are seconded for six months to small local businesses to give advice and support, and a grant of £20,000 to a design and marketing consultancy in Middlesbrough to provide advice to small local businesses. I am also intending to support numerous other projects aimed at helping small businesses in our eight areas.

Skill Shortages

36. Mr. Eastham asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the extent of skill shortages in different regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: Information is available from a number of sources about the difficulties encountered by some employers in recruiting employees with the particular experience and competence they seek, including an analysis of vacancies notified to jobcentres which have been outstanding for more than two months. In April 1986, the latest date for which results are available, this analysis showed that such difficulties occurred in all regions, and, as a proportion of all outstanding vacancies, varied from 2·1 per cent. in the north-west to 4·2 per cent. in the west midlands and the south-east. This general picture is confirmed by other surveys.

46. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Paymaster General what steps he is taking to tackle skill shortages in engineering.

Mr. Trippier: Whilst the primary responsibility for indentifying and meeting skill requirements rests with the industry, the Government are helping through a range of initiatives including two-year YTS, the job training programme and the engineering and technology programme.

Hotel and Tourism

38. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Paymaster General what progress has been made towards the establishment of nationally recognised qualifications for trainees in the hotel and tourism industries.

Mr. Trippier: The Hotel and Catering training board, as the lead industry body, is establishing flexible modular routes for progression and a workplace assessment route to vocational qualifications through the Manpower Services Commission funded "Caterbase" project. It is currently being piloted and will be submitted to the YTS certification board, whose job it is to recommend to MSC qualifications suitable for YTS, in early 1987.

In the area of tourism the Manpower Services Commission is in discussion with a wide range of bodies within the industry to develop nationally recognised qualifications. A formal submission to the YTS certification board for a vocational qualification in retail travel and tour operations will be made in early 1987.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

39. Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the current take-up of funds on the loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. Trippier: There has been an encouraging improvement in the take-up of the scheme since the changes announced in the Budget earlier this year came into effect. From 1 May 1986 to 30 November 1986, 668 guarantees were issued to cover loans to the value of £25·74 million. For the scheme as a whole 17,269 guarantees to cover lending of £565·15 million have been issued since 1981.

59. Mr. Alton asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the recent responses of bank managers at branch level to the current loan guarantee scheme for small businesses.

Mr. Trippier: I am currently discussing with bank staff, at a series of regional meetings, the use of the loan guarantee scheme. The discussions have been interesting and worth while and have covered ways in which use of the loan guarantee scheme might be increased. I believe that there are many sound business proposals that could take advantage of the scheme.

64. Mr. Hargreaves asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to extend the loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Our decision to extend the loan guarantee scheme for three years to March 1989 was announced earlier this year. I have taken a number of steps to promote awareness and usage of the scheme, including production of a promotional video and a series of regional meetings with bank managers and financial advisers.

Work Test

41. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Paymaster General how many in the Stockton, North constituency who have filled in form UB671 have had benefit refused since the inception of the form.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Stockton unemployment benefit offices introduced the revised procedure for availability testing on 17 November 1986. At 5 December 1986, the last date for which information is available, three claimants at those offices had been disallowed benefit by the independent adjudicating authorities because they were not available for work and therefore, under long-standing legal rules, not entitled to benefit.

51. Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General how many in the Liverpool Riverside constituency who have filled in form UB671 have been subsequently refused benefit since the form was introduced.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The unemployment benefit offices in the Liverpool, Riverside constituency introduced the revised procedures for availability testing on 10 November 1986. At 5 December 1986, the last date for which information is available, one claimant had been disallowed benefit following completion of UB671 as the person concerned was not available for work and therefore, under long-standing legal rules, not entitled to benefit.

52. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Paymaster General how many in the Ogmore constituency who have filled in form UB671 have had benefit refused since the adoption of the form.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The unemployment benefit offices in the Ogmore constituency have not yet introduced the revised procedures for testing availability for work.

54. Mr. Dixon asked the Paymaster General how many in the Jarrow constituency who have filled in form UB671 have been subsequently refused benefit since the form was introduced.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The unemployment benefit offices in the Jarrow constituency have not yet introduced the revised procedures for testing availability for work.

Disabled People

42. Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General what is the latest percentage figure of registered disabled people who are unemployed; and how this compares with the national average of unemployment.

Mr. Lee: There were 25,539 unemployed registered disabled people registered for employment at jobcentres and careers offices on 3 October 1986. The number of registered disabled people who are unemployed claimants at unemployment benefit offices is not available. A percentage rate of unemployed registered disabled people cannot be calculated. Because the numbers of registered disabled people in employment and in the working population are not available.

Industrial Disputes

47. Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General whether he has any plans to seek to amend section 17 of the Employment Act 1980 in respect of secondary action during disputes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: As my right hon. and noble Friend promised the Select Committee on Employment, we are committed to reviewing the law on secondary action in the light of the News International dispute, once that dispute has ended.

Leicester

48. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the employment opportunities available (a) in the city of Leicester and (b) within the constituency of Leicester, East.

Mr. Trippier: The Government's economic strategy is creating the enterprising economy necessary for the sustained growth needed to maintain rising employment. A variety of new and enhanced measures have been introduced this year to reduce unemployment throughout the country. An example in Leicester is that one of the Government's inner city task forces has been set up in the Highfields area to develop new approaches to job creation and enterprise for the benefit of residents. The task force also aims to achieve in the area it covers the maximum impact of existing Government programmes. However, the main impact on unemployment must come from employers and those who decide to work for themselves, through their drive towards competitiveness and increased flexibility. Greater moderation in wage settlements will also help to provide more jobs in Leicester and elsewhere.

Restart Scheme

49. Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he has issued any fresh guidelines to staff on the length of time each restart interview should take.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

69. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Paymaster General what is the Government's target date for interviewing all those currently long-term unemployed under restart; and on what basis this target was set.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In order to give help to long-term unemployed people as quickly as possible we have set ourselves the objective of offering everyone out of work for more than 12 months an interview on a date before 1 April 1987.

76. Mr. McCrindle asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the progress of the restart programme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The restart programme has been making good progress. By 13 November 1986, 528,386 people had been interviewed. A worthwhile offer that might lead to employment had been made to around nine out of 10 of those interviewed.

79. Mr. Marlow asked the Paymaster General how many long-term unemployed have left the register since the beginning of the restart scheme; and what was the comparable figure compared with a similar period for 1985.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Between 10 July 1986 and 9 October 1986, the estimated number of claimants in Great Britain who left the unemployment count and who had been unemployed for over one year was 253,000. The comparable figure for the period 11 July 1985 to 10 October 1985 was 220,000.

The comparison of numbers of people who ceased to claim between July and October this year and the corresponding period last year is influenced by many factors, such as changes in the economic climate, as well as by programmes such as restart.

86. Mr. Gilroy-Bevan asked the Paymaster General what increase in tourist-related employment has taken place since the introduction of the restart programme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The most recently available figures of employment in tourism-related industries are for June 1986. Since the restart programme was introduced nationally only on 1 July 1986, the information requested is not yet available.

Training Schemes

57. Mr. Stott asked the Paymaster General whether the Government have any plans to monitor the numbers obtaining permanent jobs as a result of job clubs, restart courses and the jobstart allowance.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Next spring the Manpower Services Commission proposes to carry out a study of a sample of people passing through the restart programme to determine the effects of the programme. This will provide information about the numbers of people obtaining permanent jobs through jobclubs and following restart courses. There will also be a follow-up survey of a sample of participants who have completed their six months on jobstart allowance.

West London

60. Mr. Raynsford asked the Paymaster General what steps he is taking to deal with the problems of unemployment in west London.

Mr. Lee: On 9 October I announced four new initiatives which will benefit the unemployed in west London and elsewhere. Ealing is a pilot area for two of these initiatives. The job training scheme and the extended restart programme, which will help those who have been unemployed for over six months. I also announced an increase in the number of jobclubs nationally, and by the end of March 1987 there will be 11 jobclubs in west London. We have also relaxed the rules of the enterprise allowance scheme to allow unemployed people to start businesses under franchise operations. Additionally, in north Kensington, an inner city task force aims to develop new approaches to local job creation and enterprise.

We will continue to provide practical help to the unemployed through our employment and training measures, such as the restart and community programmes —our major schemes to help the long-term unemployed. However, the main impact on unemployment must come from employers and those who decide to work for themselves, through their drive towards competitiveness and increased flexibility. Greater moderation in wage settlements will also help to provide more jobs in west London. Our economic strategy is designed to create an enterprising economy which will support sustained growth and rising employment.

Community Programme

63. Mr. Madden asked the Paymaster General what is the net take-home pay of non-supervisory staff on the community programme.

Mr. Lee: The average net take-home pay of non-supervisory staff on the community programme, based on survey evidence of tax payments and current estimates of gross wages, is £56 per week, excluding benefits received whilst on the programme.

Personal Social Services (Young People)

67. Mr. Rowe asked the Paymaster General when he last made an assessment of the employment opportunities potentially open to young people in the personal social services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My Department has under way an extensive programme of research into youth labour markets. However, no specific study of employment opportunities in personal social services has been included. If my hon. Friend has particular concerns in this area, I should be pleased to hear from him.

Job Clubs

72. Mr. Dobson asked the Paymaster General how many people have up to now passed through job clubs; what is the average length of stay; and how many have got permanent jobs as a result.

Mr. Lee: Since job clubs began in 1984 11,347 people have passed through them to 7 November 1986. The latest date for which statistics are available. Of these, 6,977 (61 per cent,) found jobs. An evaluation was carried out in early 1986 into the performance of the 29 job clubs then open. That showed that average length of stay was 4·8 weeks.

Trade Union Reform

73. Mr. Alexander asked the Paymaster General if he intends to introduce further legislation for the reform of trade unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no plans to introduce such legislation in this parliamentary Session. I am considering the option of further legislation at some time in the future.

North of England and Cumbria

75. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to announce new measures for the reduction of unemployment in the north of England and Cumbria.

Mr. Lee: The main impact of unemployment must come from employers and those who decide to work for themselves, through their drive towards competitiveness and greater flexibility. Greater moderation in wage settlements will also help to provide more jobs. Our economic strategy is creating the enterprising economy necessary for the sustained growth needed to maintain rising employment. However, we are continually looking at ways of reducing unemployment. The Department of Employment and the Manpower Services Commission have introduced a variety of new and enhanced measures this year throughout the country. The latest initiative, the job training scheme, is currently being piloted in Preston and Billingham as well as seven other locations in the country.

Wages Inspectorate

80. Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General what was the size of the Wages Inspectorate in 1979; what is it now; and what plans he has for its future.

Mr. Trippier: The numbers of staff in post in the Wages Inspectorate on 1 September 1979 and on 1 December 1986 were 290·5 (including 158 outdoor inspectors) and 156 (including 85 outdoor inspectors) respectively.

The number of posts is being reduced to 139 (including 71 outdoor inspectors) by 1 April 1987.

Local Enterprise Agencies

81. Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General what assistance his Department has given to local enterprise agencies.

Mr. Trippier: The main support for local enterprise agencies must rest with the private sector in partnership with other local interests. However, my Department is encouraging the private sector in this role through the local enterprise agency grant scheme. The scheme came into operation on 1 April this year and superseded a modest pump-priming grant scheme that my Department took over from the Department of Trade and Industry. Additionally, limited financial support is also being provided under my Department's inner cities initiative. That support, together with that provided under the aforementioned past and current grant schemes, is expected to amount to approximately £3 million by the end of the financial year.

Sheltered Placement Scheme

85. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Paymaster General what is the current contribution of his Department to the Manpower Services Commission for the sheltered placement scheme.

Mr. Lee: My Department has provided the resources to support 1,000 new places under the sheltered placement scheme in 1986-87. This represents a 50 per cent. increase in a single year. By 31 March 1987, the scheme will provide job opportunities for about 2,900 severely disabled people.

On the best information presently available, we expect the scheme to require funding of about £7 million in 1986-87.

Job Creation

Mr. Corbyn asked the Paymaster General what are the total number of people subject to special employment and training measures at the latest available date for the Islington, North constituency; and what are the measures and the numbers affected in each case.

Mr. Lee: It is not possible to give a precise total figure because of the various bases on which local information is collated. The number of people participating in the following employment measures and training in the Islington, North constituency on 31 October were:

Community Industry	99
YTS	189
Voluntary Projects Programme	212
Adult Training	79

In addition, in the area covering the boroughs of Hackney, City, Islington, Tower Hamlets, Camden, Westminster, Kensington and Chelsea, and Hammersmith and Fulham which includes the Islington, South constituency, there are 4,954 people on the community programme and 637 people receiving the enterprise allowance. In London and the south-east 4,308 people were participating in the new workers scheme. A further breakdown for these schemes for the Islington, North constituency is available only at disproportionate cost.

"Arts and Disabled People" (Report)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received from the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust concerning the recommendations of "Arts and Disabled People", the report of committee of inquiry under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Attenborough; what action he has taken or will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My predecessor met representatives of the Carnegie council last March to discuss the recommendations of this report, following correspondence with my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State and his predecessor. Officials of the Manpower Services Commission are in contact with the council to examine how more community programme projects in the arts can be mounted to help disabled people. We shall also continue to ensure that those in the disablement advisory service and others involved in finding work for disabled people include employers in the arts in their overall programme of visits.

Hotel Classification Scheme

Mr. Gregory asked the Paymaster General what are the short-term and long-term policies, respectively, of the hotel classification scheme of the English Tourist Board.

Mr. Trippier: The scheme is to be publicly launched in January 1987. The English Tourist Board will monitor the scheme carefully to assess the extent to which it meets the needs of the industry and its customers, and will consider any necessary modification in consultation with the other national tourist boards.

Dangerous Substances

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Paymaster General how many installations which have been notified to the Health and Safety Executive under the notification of Installations Handling Hazardous Substances Regulations 1982 come under these regulations by virtue of the storage of the hazardous substance chlorine.

Mr. Trippier: The number of installations notified to the Health and Safety Executive under the notification of Installations Handling Hazardous Substances Regulations 1982 by virtue of the storage of chlorine is 153.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Paymaster General how many sites come under the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984 by virtue of the dangerous substance involved being one listed in schedule 3, column 1 of the regulations which has a quantity as listed in schedule 3, column 2 of the regulations of 1 tonne or less.

Mr. Trippier: The number of sites notified to the Health and Safety Executive subject to the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984 by virtue of the dangerous substance involved being one listed in schedule 3, column 1 of the regulations which have a quantity as listed in schedule 3, column 2, of the regulations of one tonne or less is 118.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Welfare

Mr. Crouch asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he intends in regard to the approval as an export lairage of the premises at Homestead farm, Petham, near Canterbury, in the light of the recent successful prosecution of the lairage manager for failing to comply with the minimum rest period for exported animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We do not propose to take special action as a result of the recent court case. However the approval of Homestead farm, in common with that of other export lairages, is reviewed annually by my Department.

Farmers (Loans)

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the fixed interest loans available to farmers in countries within the European Economic Community.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I regret that this information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Plant Pests and Disease

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to prevent the introduction and spread of plant pests and disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department takes stringent action to prevent the introduction and spread of serious plant pests and diseases. Active campaigns are currently in force against rhizomania disease, cucumber downey mildew, pea bacterial blight and the western flower thrips.

Our plant health legislation lays down a wide range of import controls to avoid the introduction of plant pests and diseases. The Plant Health and Seeds Inspectorate carries out checks at ports, airports and markets and on farms and nurseries to ensure that imports are free from infection. If they are not, action is taken to destroy, treat or otherwise safely dispose of the infected material. Immediate contact is made with the exporting country to prevent a recurrence.

We do not hesitate to impose additional controls when new threats occur. We are able in an emergency to supplement the requirements of the EC directive by unilateral controls.

If outbreaks of alien pests and diseases occur, we take firm steps to eradicate or control the infection and to minimise spread. Inspectors may require, by statutory notice, infected material to be destroyed or treated and marketing restrictions can be imposed.

I attach great importance to the preservation of the United Kingdom's plant health status and shall continue actively to pursue this objective.

Milk and Dairies Regulations

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration he has given to the introduction of a variable rate for hygiene and quality control visits under the milk and dairies regulations.

Mr. Gummer: Charges need to reflect the costs which the Ministry incurs in administering the Milk and Dairy Regulations, and these do not vary very much between large and small producers. Significant differentiation of the visiting charge would, therefore, be difficult to justify. However, as I announced on 4 December at column 1061, we are considering whether the proposed charge might be reduced from £90 to £80 for producers with fewer than 20 cows.

Heart Disease

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the actions taken by his Department since the publication of the COMA report designed to assist in the prevention of coronary heart disease.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Proposals for regulations to require labelling of the fat content in food have been circulated widely and comments on these are being assessed. Consideration is also being given to the publicity material necessary to assist consumers to make use of the information that will be provided on food labels. We have also had discussions with catering interests to see what can be done to provide consumers with information on meals served in catering establishments comparable with that which the regulations will require for other foods.

Changes have been made this year in the application of certification standards for sheepmeat, from 6 January, and for beef, from 12 May. These have excluded the fatter animals from qualification for premia.

We have negotiated agreement in Brussels for alcoholic drinks throughout the European Community to be marked with their alcoholic strength.

We also take COMA recommendations into account along with other considerations in formulating our position on common agricultural policy discussions. The Ministry publication "The Manual of Nutrition" which is widely used for home economics courses has also been revised to take account of the COMA advice. We are involved in monitoring changes in foods and in peoples diets, with a view to assessing the effects on public health.

EEC (Subsidised Food)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will raise at the next meeting of the Management Committee the question of seeking an assurance from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics that the subsidised food provided from European Economic Community stockpiles is not used for military purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Intervention Stores

Mr. Parry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will now make it his practice to list the sites of European Economic Community intervention butter stores;

(2) how many locations in Liverpool are used for European Economic Community intervention butter stores.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Sheep

Mr. Speller asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to take further action to protect the welfare of sheep exported from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Further to the arrangements already in force, my Department has notified the exporters of sheep to France for slaughter or further fattening of two new conditions. Before a licence is issued they will have to provide details of the approximate time at which the animals will be fed and watered if the journey is likely to exceed 18 hours, in addition to details of the place which are already required. Within seven days of shipment they will also have to provide a written statement from the French importer confirming the time of arrival at the final destination and, where appropriate, confirming that the animals were fed and watered and giving the time at which this was done.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards the future of the common agricultural policy in the light of the recent estimate by the EEC-funded European Union of Consumers that the net cost of the policy per average family is £13 per week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 246]: The Government's policy is to endeavour to bring the supply of, and demand for, CAP products into better balance through price restraint and all other appropriate means. Such a policy is in the interests of consumers, taxpayers and the long-term health of the agricultural community. The policies we have pursued since 1979 have resulted in food prices increasing at a lower rate than the retail price index as a whole, which in turn has been below the rate of increase in average earnings. At the same time we have supported the farming community in providing 80 per cent. of our people's temperate food, and caring for 80 per cent. of the land area of the United Kingdom.

WALES

Farmers

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many farmers in Wales are owner occupiers; and how many tenant farmers there are farming over 3 hectares.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: As at June 1985 there were 19,758 wholly owned main holdings in Wales; and 4,476 wholly rented main holdings of over 3 hectares.

These figures exclude partially owned or rented holdings.

Housing

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy towards the role of local housing authorities in providing new accommodation for categories other than special needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: I have been asked to reply.

The main priority for local authorities must be the renovation and repair of their existing housing. For new accommodation to rent, our main aim is to diversify the supply and increase the choice available to tenants by creating opportunities for private sector organisations to become involved in meeting a wider range of housing needs. Local authorities are ideally placed to co-ordinate and encourage participation in this task by a variety of agencies, including building societies, other financial institutions, private developers, and housing associations.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Miss Maureen McGoldrick

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has come to a conclusion as to whether to exercise his powers under the Education Act in the case of Miss Maureen McGoldrick; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend yesterday used his powers under section 68 of the Education Act 1944 to direct the authority not to proceed with any further disciplinary hearing or action against Miss McGoldrick in respect of the allegations against her.

ENERGY

Passive Solar Housing Technology

77. Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Energy what design guidance and requirements his Department is issuing to local authorities and housing associations for new housing and housing renovation work to encourage them to use passive solar housing techniques and technology.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer to the answer that I gave the right hon. Member on 15 December, at column 381. The Department of the Environment's Building Research Establishment is actively involved in our programme. I very much welcome the important contribution that it is making.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) on 8 December, Official Report, column 6, whether any investment approval given to the Central Electricity Generating Board since 1979 has included provision for payments of compensation or for the purchase of residential property beyond that required for operational purposes; and if he will make it his policy to require separate identification of any such costs in considering whether to give investment approval for a new development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Such payments would be a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board and I would not expect them to be separately identified in any investment approval.

PRIME MINISTER

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what factors Her Majesty's Government take into account in deciding the timing of the release of information of commercial sensitivity, having regard to relevant market factors; and how these factors were applied in relation to the disclosure of parts of the Solicitor-General's letter to the then Secretary of State for Defence relating to Westland.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November, at columns 49-50.

Family Income

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Prime Minister what was the ratio for (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Scotland, of average family income for the richest quarter of households compared with the poorest quarter of households in 1979; and what was the ratio in 1985.

The Prime Minister: It is estimated from the family expenditure survey that the ratios of the household incomes for those households in the top quarter of the income range compared with those in the bottom quarter, are as follows measuring income in gross terms:

	United Kingdom	Scotland
1985	7·9:1	8·1:1

Income as measured by the FES is not an indicator of wealth. Households with the largest incomes tend to be those with the largest number of members. The lowest quartile of households has a predominance of lone adult households including pensioners while the upper quartile has the highest average number of members contributing to the income.

Cabinet Committees

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether she will specify the number of standing Cabinet committees and sub-committees and their titles and functions; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Gentleman of 14 November 1984, at columns 243-44.

TRANSPORT

London Regional Transport

Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he will announce his proposals for the levy on Londons' ratepayers in support of his grants to London Regional Transport for 1987-88.

Mr. Moore: Section 13 of the London Regional Transport Act 1984 empowers me to make a levy on London ratepayers to recover up to two thirds of the cost of my total grants to London Regional Transport. I have today laid before Parliament a draft levy order which is subject to affirmative resolution. This provides for a levy in 1987-88 of 7·77p in the pound, which is estimated to raise £156·9 million. This is equivalent to 65·6 per cent. of my estimated expenditure in 1987-88 on grants to LRT, which amount to £239 million; the balance of 82·1 million will be found from the Exchequer.

By comparison with 1986-87 these proposals represent a reduction in grant of £56 million and a reduction in the call on ratepayers of £36·7 million. The burden on ratepayers falls by slightly more than 2p in the pound, while the proportion of expenditure they fund has been held constant.

My proposals reflect London Regional Transport's achievements in cutting costs while providing a more efficient and attractive public transport service in the capital. LRT has proposed for 1987-88 a further cut in the revenue deficit to £58 million, and within that sum I have been able to increase to £6 million the provision for funding Dial-a-Ride services for disabled people. Investment will continue at a high level and will include expenditure on new Underground trains which I approved in September and crime prevention measures which were announced on 28 November.

Further details of LRT's proposals for next year are given in its annual business plan, which will be published shortly. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Transport Council

Sir Julian Ridsdale asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Community Transport Council on 15 and 16 December.

Mr. Moore: I am glad to say that the Council agreed yesterday a package of four important shipping measures which lay the foundation of a common shipping policy. This represents a historic step forward in the development of the European Community and will create conditions for the British fleet to compete on more equal terms in world trade. In particular it will liberalise Community international trades, enable the Community to take concerted action to combat protectionism for third countries, counter unfair pricing practices particularly from state trading lines, and establish a competition regime for shipping.

The regulation on a freedom to provide shipping services in international trades to, from and between member states is the key instrument in the package. It provides for a progressive phasing out of unilateral cargo reservation and discriminatory cargo-sharing arrangements in bilateral agreements with third countries over the period leading up to the completion of the internal market which the Community has already decided shall be achieved by the end of 1992.

The Council was not able to reach agreement on the liberalisation of Community cabotage trades and I expect to make an announcement early in the new year of how we propose to pursue this in the United Kingdom's interests.

This package of regulations, while being of major importance to our shipping industry, is the first stage of the development of a common shipping policy. It was agreed that the Community should move straight to the further development of policy aimed both at the harmonisation of aids given by Community Governments to their merchant fleets and at ways of strengthening the position of the Community shipping industry in today's highly competitive international shipping market.

On the inland transport side, the Council agreed to increase each member state's quota of Community wide road haulage permits by 15 per cent. in 1987. A further increase up to 40 per cent. for 1987 could not be adopted owing to the lack of an opinion from the European Parliament and a reserve by one member state, but adoption should be possible early in the new year. The Council also agreed in principle to a regulation allocating 90 million ecu for transport infrastructure projects in individual member states, including two projects in the United Kingdom. This regulation is still subject to a United Kingdom reserve pending parliamentary scrutiny. A directive was adopted to streamline procedures for goods traffic at community frontiers, and the Council agreed a framework for further work to improve railway finances. Finally, the Council called on the Commission to do a report on port finances with a view to ensuring greater transparency of port accounts in the future.

On air transport, the Council again concentrated on a three-year first step towards the 1992 target date for full liberalisation. We were able to secure unanimous support for our proposals on capacity and a substantial majority for our ideas on market access. There was also usefulprogress on fares, where seven member states clearly support our efforts to allow cheaper travel, and only two are still totally opposed.

This means that at last there is solid progress in an area where the Community has failed to act for far too long. It puts the incoming Belgian presidency in a commanding position to complete a worthwhile first stage package.

Traffic Lights

Mr. McGuire asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to introduce a standard procedure throughout the United Kingdom on the operation of traffic lights at crossroads in respect of giving priority at the first change of lights to the traffic turning right.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are a number of techniques described in the Department's advice note TA 16/81 for dealing with this type of problem. It is for the appropriate highway authority to determine which technique is best suited in the light of local conditions. A copy of the advice note is in the Library of the House.

Coaches (Speed Limiters)

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 21 November, Official Report, column 361, what steps he is taking to minimise the period between the making of the regulations on speed limiters for coaches and their operative date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: When we consult interested parties on the draft regulations early next year, we shall seek their views on the earliest dates that seem practically possible, bearing in mind the need to spread the work of installing speed limiters over a reasonable period.

Motorways

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 24 November, Official Report, column 71, why the design flow figure given of 91,000 vehicles per day for dual three-lane motorways differs from the figure of 85,000 vehicles per day given on 24 February, Official Report, column 501; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The design flows for dual three-lane motorways are specified in Department of Transport standards, which are revised from time to time. During the period when most of the M25 was being planned 85,000 vehicles was specified as the maximum design flow for 16 hours on an August day. The figure of 91,000 is the corresponding flow for a 24-hour August day. In the current Departmental standard, issued in November 1985, the flow is expressed as an annual average daily flow (24 hours) of 79,000. Allowing for seasonal variations in traffic volume this corresponds to the peak month figures mentioned above.

Buses

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received since the implementation of bus deregulation.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received many such representations, on various aspects of deregulation.

Road Accidents

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the consideration given to the potential for road accident casualty reduction when he approves road schemes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: When assessing new road schemes the benefits for savings in road casualty costs are considered along with other economic and wider environmental effects. On average about 14 per cent. of the total economic benefits of schemes are attributed to reductions in accidents.

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will rank the road schemes approved during the past year in terms of anticipated casualty reductions for £100,000 spent.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Casualty savings account for part of the total estimated benefit of new road schemes. It would be misleading to compare the total costs of road schemes with a partial measure of their benefits or to rank schemes on this basis. The information asked for could only be assembled with disproportionate expenditure of time and cost.

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to introduce any further measures for accident reduction during the remainder of European Road Safety Year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have just published a revised edition of the accident investigation and prevention manual. I have written to the chairman of each local authority highway committee drawing his attention to the manual and emphasising that local AIP work represents the single most cost-effective means of reducing road casualties yet identified.

I am today announcing new criteria for the installation of crash barriers on dual carriageways. New regulations on pelican crossings will be also laid very shortly.

European Road Safety Year has provided a useful focus for effort by central and local government and by voluntary and private sector organisations. However, the task of reducing road casualties will not end on 31 December. Continued progress will depend on the ability of central Government, local authorities and others to deploy their resources on strategies that are of demonstrable cost-effectiveness in casualty reducing terms, thus saving the maximum number of lives and reducing avoidable injuries.

Motor Cycle Noise

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the agreement on motor cycle noise reached at the European Community environment council on 24 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The scope of the Commission's original proposals was set out in a Department of Transport memorandum in November 1984 (9148/84). Despite the two-year delay in reaching agreement, the Council has agreed a number of significant improvements to the Commission's original proposals. The table compares the Council agreement with the current limits and the Commission's proposals. The agreement also provides for a Community standard to be prepared on replacement silencers.

The agreement reflects a Community policy to make motor cycle manufacturers improve their product so as to keep in step with the progress being made by car and lorry manufacturers to reduce noise at source, whilst improving no threat whatsoever to the traditional air-cooled machine.

It is our intention, as soon as the directive is formally adopted by the Council, to prepare draft amendments to the construction and use regulations so as to make the new limits applicable at the due dates to new machines registered in Britain. We will consult representative organisations on the draft amending regulations in the usual way.

Safety Barriers

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has decided to amend the criteria governing the erection of safety fencing in the central reserves of dual carriageway roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. In future safety fencing will be provided on all dual carriageway trunk roads where it can be shown that this is justified by the traffic using the road. It will be provided both as part of new road schemes and in the course of renewing existing roads.

In addition, there will be a programme to provide fencing on other lengths of existing trunk roads. The net effect will be that most roads with dual carriageways will have such fencing. All existing safety fencing will be inspected and repaired as part of normal maintenance work.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Rhodes James asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of the further consultation over the rate support grant report announced by Her Majesty's Government on 3 December, he is able to offer any guidance on the distribution of transport supplementary grant to local highway authorities.

Mr. Moore: I am proposing acceptance of 70 new schemes for support with a view to giving further impetus to improvement of more important local authority roads. I also propose to maintain my commitment to support around 270 schemes accepted in previous settlements, many of which which are already under construction.

Officials have today informed each highway authority of their expenditure I propose to accept for TSG, at the proposed 50 per cent. rate of grant. In total, I propose to accept £360 million expenditure and give £180 million grant—almost a 10 per cent. increase over 1986-87.

A copy of the press notice I am issuing today giving total proposed accepted expenditure for each authority has been placed in the Library.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Jordan

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he plans to offer further aid to Jordan following the launching of its new five-year plan and its programme for the occupied territories.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have offered a new loan of £10 million, on concessionary terms and tied to the provision of British goods and services, as a contribution to the new Jordan five-year plan. The finance will be spent on capital projects to be agreed between our two Governments.

In support of the Jordanian Government's objectives to assist the economic and social development of the occupied territories we propose to increase our aid to the West Bank and Gaza to £5 million on grant terms over the next five years. Half of this will be channelled through Jordanian institutions. The finance would be available for technical co-operation, training, British equipment and some elements of local costs.

RMS St. Helena

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what type of ship will be built to replace the RMS St. Helena.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government have given careful consideration to a variety of options and have decided, with the agreement of the St. Helena Government, that the new ship will be a 125-berth mixed passenger-cargo vessel, built in a United Kingdom yard. We expect the ship to meet all St. Helena's estimated passenger and cargo needs for the foreseeable future, except for petrol, which cannot be carried on a passenger ship and which will be supplied under separate arrangements.

The Overseas Development Administration is now setting in motion the competitive tendering arrangements for design and construction of the vessel.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism

Mr. Gregory asked the Paymaster General which local authorities in England have published tourism strategies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not comprehensively available centrally. However, there has been a substantial increase in the number of local authorities which have published tourist strategies. The English Tourist Board and the non-statutory regional tourist boards are actively encouraging all local authorities to produce their own strategies for tourism development based on local needs and priorities of each area.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General whether he intends to introduce any further new method of calculation for the unemployment figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As a result of the ending of compulsory "signing-on" at jobcentres, the method of calculating the unemployment figures was changed in October 1982 from a count of registrants at jobcentres to a count of claimants of unemployment benefit. Since then there have been two changes in the calculations to remove mistakes over counting, one very minor. We have made no other changes to the method of calculations and I have no present plans to make any further changes.

Mr. Hardy asked the Paymaster General how many young people are now unemployed; and how many are engaged in officially supported employment schemes within the Rotherham travel-to-work area.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 9 October 1986 the number of unemployed claimants aged under 18 in the Rotherham and Mexborough travel-to-work area was 1,891. The number of people aged under 18 in employment schemes in this area is not available. However, the new workers scheme, which helps people under 21 who are ineligible for YTS into full-time permanent jobs, currently supports over 600 people in Sheffield and Rotherham, a proportion of whom will be under 18. Also at the community industry unit at Rotherham there are 62 young people aged under 18 participating in community industry. In addition, in the Rotherham travel-to-work area on 5 December 1986 there were 2,473 young people in training on YTS. The vast majority of claimant school leavers aged under 18 on 9 October were eligible for YTS; and some will have taken up YTS places since the count was made.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will publish a table showing the numbers and percentages of jobs lost, or gained, in Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom as a whole between June 1979 and June 1986, or the latest month for which figures are available in (a) all industries, (b) all manufacturing industries, (c) all service industries, (d) shipbuilding and repairing, (e) metal goods engineering and vehicles, (f) mechanical engineering, (g) electrical electronic engineering and instrument engineering, (h) health, education and personal social services, (i) retail distribution and (j) banking, insurance and financial;

(2) if he will publish a table showing for Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom as a whole the number of persons at work who are (a) employees and (b) self-employed, in June 1979, June 1983 and June 1986 or the latest month for which figures are available; and if he will estimate the number of second jobs included in these figures;

(3) if he will publish a table showing the number of additional (a) jobs in service industries, (b) jobs in banking, insurance and finance, (c) self employed and (d) small business starts over stops, created in (i) Northern Ireland and (ii) the United Kingdom between June 1983 and June 1986.

Mr. Lee: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Training Scheme (Transfers)

Mr. Wigley asked the Paymaster General whether persons on Manpower Services Commission training schemes can transfer from one scheme which they have commenced to another without a loss of benefit for any intervening period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: A person can transfer from one MSC scheme to another, subject to the individual's circumstances and the conditions applying to particular schemes. Should the individual claim benefit in the intervening period, he is subject to the normal rules of entitlement. I am not aware of any particular problems in the administration of such claims by my Department.

Printing Industry (London)

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General how many unfilled vacancies exist in the printing industry in the London area.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the library. On 8 August 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of vacancies by industry is available, the number of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres in the Greater London area in the paper, printing and publishing industries was 444. A more detailed industrial analysis is not available.

Restart Scheme

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Paymaster General whether his Department will conduct an investigation to estimate how many of the long-term unemployed leave the register as a result of the normal inflow and outflow compared with those leaving as a direct result of the restart interviews over a controlled period of six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I doubt whether it is possible to carry out a controlled experiment to monitor the precise effects of restart. There are significant variations in the normal flow into and out of unemployment because of changing labour market conditions and variable seasonal influences. These make it very difficult to provide a reliable estimate of what the position could have been without restart. We are considering ways of assessing the impact of the scheme, but we are not yet sure that a reasonably accurate assessment of its direct employment effect can be made.

Mr. Terry Fields asked the Paymaster General how many unemployed people have been offered jobs as a result of restart training schemes in the (a) Liverpool travel-to-work area and (b) Broadgreen constituency area; how many people have had benefit suspended having failed to attend restart interviews in (i) Liverpool travel-to-work area and (ii) Broadgreen constituency area; and how many people have had benefit suspended for not meeting the requirements of the new availability for work test in (1) Liverpool travel-to-work area and (2) Broadgreen constituency area.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 258]: We have no means of knowing how many people are offered or obtain jobs as a result of their participation in the restart programme, which is designed to improve their prospects of employment.

No one can lose his benefit entitlement solely as a result of the restart programme. Under long-standing legal rules, people can lose their entitlement to benefit if they fail to attend an interview, are not available for work or refuse an offer of suitable employment.

We cannot provide information about loss of benefit in the exact form requested as it is not possible to equate precisely unemployment benefit office areas within the locations quoted. Failure to attend an interview has always resulted in disallowance of benefit, not suspension, but up to 13 November 1986 the number of people in what is broadly the Liverpool travel-to-work area who failed to attend a restart interview and as a result had benefit disallowed by independent adjudication officers was 666. Of these, 196 were in the unemployment benefit office areas that largely covered the Broadgreen constituency. Subsequently, 469 and 157 claimants respectively had benefit reinstated after attending a restart interview.

The improved procedures for testing the availability for work of new claimants in accordance with long-standing legal rules, which I announced on 28 October, at columns 175-87, are a separate arrangement from the restart programme, which is for long-term unemployment people. Up to 5 December 1986, in the areas of Liverpool and Broadgreen respectively, 155 and 28 people who were making a fresh claim had their benefit suspended after completing the availability questionnaire, pending a decision on their entitlement by the independent adjudication officer.

Care Facilities

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General what information is made available to employees of the Department of Health and Social Security and claimants on the availability of full-time child-care and day-care facilities for dependent adults within the area, when the new availability for work test is applied.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The provision of information about child-care and day-care facilities is a matter for the local authorities and other bodies which run them. Such information may be made available to staff and claimants at local offices of the Department of Health and Social Security or of the Department of Employment by local arrangement. We have no plans to make any changes.

We have not introduced any new test for benefit, but merely introduced a new form to help with the application of long-established rules followed by successive Governments.

A person who claims that he or she is actively seeking work and so is available for work and eligible for benefit as an unemployed person must also accept some personal responsibility for making arrangements for dependants to enable that person to take up a job. If a claimant says that he or she is not able to contemplate taking work, the law and the legal rules have always provided that the claimant is not entitled to benefit as unemployed.

YTS

Mr. Nicholls asked the Paymaster General how many people (a) are at present and (b) have been on the YTS in the constituency of Teignbridge since 1983.

Mr. Trippier: At present there are 296 young people in training on YTS schemes in Teignbridge. Since April 1986, when two year YTS began, there have been 329 entering the schemes. I regret the Manpower Services Commission's management information system is unable to give historical data prior to that date.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what trends he forecasts in the number of people employed in manufacturing industries in the north-west.

Mr. Lee: We do not make such forecasts of employment.

Inner Cities Initiative

Mr. Butterfill asked the Paymaster General what steps he is taking through his inner cities initiative to combat crime and the alienation of young people in inner city areas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The aim of our inner cities initiative is to tackle the general problems of employment and disadvantage faced by inner city residents and young people in particular. We are undertaking a wide variety of relevant projects and I have now decided to provide the necessary finance to support two new schemes to combat crime and the alienation of some young people.

First, I have agreed to support the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders in establishing an inner cities crime prevention development unit. The five full-time staff of this unit will work alongside the Government's task force leaders in the eight areas where they are based in devising and implementing a programme designed to reduce crime and the fear of crime.

I have also agreed to support a consortium comprising the Apex Trust, the National Youth Bureau and the Intermediate Treatment Fund. The consortium will combine the central and local expertise of the participant organisations and will provide task forces with help and advice on tackling the problems, including the employment problems of alienated young people in the eight areas. In addition, the Apex Trust and the National Youth Bureau will each provide a member of staff to work alongside the Government's task force leaders in Handsworth and North Peckham.

Both NACRO and the consortium will be making the necessary appointments and secondments very shortly. The budget of our inner cities task force initiative is being used to provide funds of £214,194 to NACRO and of £99,450 to the consortium.

Industrial Disputes

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Paymaster General what was the total number of industrial strikes recorded for each year since 1975.

Mr. Lee: The available information on the number of stoppages through industrial disputes is given in table 4.2 of Employment Gazette (December 1986 issue).

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Paymaster General (1) how many production days were lost due to industrial strike action in each year since 1975;

(2) how many man-hours were lost due to industrial strike action in each year since 1975.

Mr. Lee: The available information on working days lost through industrial disputes is given in table 4.2 of Employment Gazette (December 1986 issue). Information on man hours lost is not available.

Smallpox

Mr. Hoyle asked the Paymaster General if he will list the premises which have handled or stored smallpox virus in the United Kingdom since 1975.

Mr. Trippier: The following premises are known to the Health and Safety Executive to have handled or stored smallpox virus since 1975:

Birmingham University
Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research, Porton
St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington

Stocks are no longer held at any of the above.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Paymaster General when smallpox SP22, 16.12.52 was discovered at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicines; and how it was labelled.

Mr. Trippier: Seven ampoules, contained in a cardboard box bearing the legend "smallpox SP22" and dated 16.12.52 were discovered at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine on 3 December 1985.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Paymaster General whether all establishments known to have stored smallpox have been visited by the Health and Safety Executive since the discovery of smallpox SP22, 16.12.52 at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine; if he will list all such visits since 1981 to date; and what were the findings of the inspectors.

Mr. Trippier: All establishments known to the Health and Safety Executive to have stored smallpox have been visited during 1986.

These establishments were also visited on several occasions between 1981 and 1985. However, to distinguish visits which may have been made in connection with smallpox from those made for other purposes could be done only at disproportionate cost.

Pathogenic Materials

Mr. Hoyle asked the Paymaster General (1) if the Health and Safety Executive is satisfied that all establishments handling and storing pathogenic materials in ACDP categories 3 and 4 have satisfactory arrangements for keeping inventories of such materials;

(2) if establishments handling and storing pathogenic materials in ACDP categories 3 and 4 have satisfactory systems for rendering potentially infective material safe before disposal.

Mr. Trippier: Establishments handling or storing hazard group 4 pathogens scheduled under the Health and Safety (Dangerous Pathogens) Regulations 1981, must notify the Health and Safety Executive. All establishments visited following such notifications had satisfactory arrangements for keeping inventories of such material and satisfactory systems for rendering potentially infective materials safe before disposal. Premises which handle hazard group 3 pathogens are not notifiable and it is not possible to retrieve information about the standards at these premises without disproportionate costs.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Paymaster General how many improvement or prohibition notices the Health and Safety Executive has issued in the current year in relation to an establishment's failure to maintain complete records of all human pathogens stored.

Mr. Trippier: Between 1 January and 31 March 1986 no notices relating to failure to maintain complete records of stocks of human pathogens were issued by the Health and Safety Executive. Statistics from April 1986 are not yet available centrally.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Paymaster General if the Health and Safety Executive has taken any prosecutions against establishments which fail to maintain records of the storage of human pathogens.

Mr. Trippier: No.

Official Secrets Act

Mr. Freud asked the Paymaster General what is his policy with regard to requiring officers of local authorities entering into agreements with the Manpower Services Commission to sign a declaration under the Official Secrets Acts; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Manpower Services Commission rarely requires officers of local authorities to sign such a declaration. The Official Secrets Act is a consideration only when local authorities, or other contractors, need access to Manpower Services Commission information to fulfill an agreement. Such access is normally restricted to research and development or premises work, very little involves local authorities.

Skillcentre (Deptford)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Paymaster General what courses are currently offered at the Deptford skillcentre; how many places are available on each; and how many of these places are currently filled.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 15 December 1986, c. 369]: There are 70 courses currently offered at the Deptford skillcentre. The type of course, the number of places available and the number of places filled on each course are shown in the following table.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Paymaster General what is the total capacity of the Deptford skillcentre; and how much of it is currently in use.

Mr. Trippier: [pursuant to his reply, 15 December 1986, c. 369]. The Deptford skillcentre has a current capacity of up to 282 training places spread over a variety of trade groups. At present 225 of these training places are filled.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Uganda (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the recent visit to Uganda by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker); what is the current situation concerning the outstanding claims for compensation by Ugandan and Commonwealth refugees; and if he will give details of representations made by Her Majesty's Government.

Mrs. Chalker: I was warmly received by the Ugandan Government during my visit on 5 and 6 December and had substantive talks with President Museveni and other Ugandan Ministers and officials about ways in which we might further assist the Ugandan Government to restore peace and prosperity.

I raised for the third time this year the question of outstanding claims for compensation with President Museveni. The President has undertaken to look into the matter, particularly the process by which such claims are examined and verified by the Ugandan authorities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Initiatives (Women)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those initiatives of his Department which have been of benefit to women, since 1979, the cost or estimated cost of these initiatives, and the proportion of the total budget of his Department this represents.

Mr. Butcher: I am concerned about the under-representation of women in certain areas of industry, including management, information technology and engineering. My Department has therefore taken a number of initiatives including:

(a) Women into Science and Engineering Year 1984. My Department provided £27,000 to help fund an Equal Opportunities Commission-run double decker bus which toured the country providing teachers, parents and schoolgirls with an opportunity to gain knowledge of current technology and what is involved in an engineering career. It also contributed £8,000 to producing and distributing WISE literature;

(b) Women's Training Roadshows. The Women's National Commission has, with the help of £31,000 from my Department, run roadshows around the country to encourge women of all ages into a wider range of jobs;

(c) Challenge of Management. With the help of £5,000 from my Department, the Industrial Society has run courses to give sixth form schoolgirls an insight into industrial management;

(d) Executive Shadows Pilot Project. My Department has contributed £5,000 to a project encouraging able girls to consider a career in industry. Sixth form students "shadow" business executives, mainly on a one-to-one basis, at work for a week in 1986;

(e) Information Technology. My Department has sponsored, to the tune of £31,000, projects in Croydon, Sheffield and Cambridge to develop a strategy and materials for teaching girls and women about (and through) information technology;

(f) National Electronic Council Project. The Council has received a grant for £143,000 from my Department to promote a range of activities including, principally, a series of conferences aimed at teachers, with a view to influencing the subject choices of girls aged 13 and 14 and encouraging them to consider a career in electronics;

(g) Engineering and Technology programme. My Department has contributed to the programme which includes courses aimed at helping women gain qualifications making them better fitted for careers in areas of industry traditionally dominated my men;

(h) The Department's industry/education unit makes available to schools a series of videos on women and engineering, information technology and related issues;

(i) As one of the sponsors of Industry Year, the Department has participated in the women's working group, which was formed to ensure that women take a full and active part in the initiative;

(j) The Department contributed £9,000 to the Sheffield local education authority information technology project to produce computer software to appeal equally to boys and girls;

(k) The Cambridge Women's Resource Centre has received £22,000 towards the purchase of computer software;

(l) My right hon. Friend has encouraged the invitation of more women to undertake public appointments for which he is responsible. Just over 23 per cent. of these appointments are now held by women.

The aggregate cost of all the Department's initiatives concerning women cannot be estimated precisely, since some costs are not individually recorded, but it is unlikely to exceed 1 per cent. of the Department's total budget. The Department follows a policy of equal opportunity for its own staff.

Spare Parts

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people are employed in the manufacture, distribution and sale of spare parts for both imported and domestically produced goods of all types; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I regret that this information is not available.

Vauxhall Cars

Mr. Woodcock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any information on the level of imports of Vauxhall badged cars into the United Kingdom and the level of exports of Vauxhall badged cars from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Giles Shaw: What information is available is given in the table:

	New registrations in the United Kingdom of Vauxhall passenger cars built abroad	Vauxhall United Kingdom production for export

Strikes (Lost Production)

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the cost of production lost due to industrial strike action in each year since 1975.

Mr. Butcher: Figures for the overall cost of production lost due to industrial strike action are not available, but some indication may be obtained from the figures for working days lost.

Films (Release)

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is ready to make a final decision on the recommendations of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the early release of films.

Mr. Howard: No. I have not yet received the Director General of Fair Trading's assessment of the result of the pilot experiment on the early release of films which has been conducted in response to the recommendation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in their 1973 report on the supply of films for exhibition in cinemas.

Regional Aid

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish his latest figures for the amount of regional development grant and regional selective assistance paid out for Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom as a whole for 1984-85, 1985-86 and so far in 1986-87.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Northern Ireland has its own forms of regional assistance which are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. Payments of regional development grant[1] and regional selective assistance[2] in Great Britain in 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 to date are:

	1984-85	1985-86	[3]1986-87
Regional Development Grants	411·0	358·5	346·9
Regional Selective Assistance	97·8	119·8	68·4

[1] Consists of old and new style RDGs; the new RDG scheme was introduced on 29 November 1984.

[2] Industrial and training grants only.

[3] April to November.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his budgeted figure for payments for Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom as a whole in (a) regional development grant and (b) regional selective assistance; and what is his best estimates of the amounts due.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Northern Ireland has its own forms of regional incentives which are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. For Great Britain, combined Supply Estimate and Winter Supplementary Estimate provisions for payments of regional development grant and regional selective assistance in 1986-87 are £504·8 million and £160·6 million respectively. As I said in my reply to the hon. Member on 8 December 1986, at column 25, I am not yet in a position to give a clear estimate of the amounts due.

Food Products (Exports)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list information available to him on the consignments of food products exported from Britain since 1 January that have been rejected by the importing country; and what were the reasons for rejection.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that the information requested is not available.

SCOTLAND

Forestry Commission

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the work force levels for the Forestry Commission for forest planting, conservation, felling and clearing in 1970, 1980 and 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: The numbers of forest workers employed by the Forestry Commission in each of these years were as follows:

	1970		1980		1985
Forest workers employed on forest management activities	4,168	(1,600)	2,528	(1,084)	1,964	(816)
Forest workers employed on harvesting activities	1,734	(666)	2,090	(896)	1,256	(522)
	5,902	(2,266)	4,618	(1,980)	3,220	(1,338)

Note: Figures in brackets denote those workers employed in Scotland.

Forest workers can be employed on a range of activities, and it is not possible to give a more detailed breakdown of the above figures.

Her Majesty's Inspectors

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the ways in which members of Her Majesty's inspectorate are accountable for their work, with particular reference to inspection of, and reporting on, schools and colleges; and what remedies are available to those who consider that they have been or may have been, unfairly treated in the course of Her Majesty's inspectorate's activities.

Mr. John MacKay: Her Majesty's inspectorate is part of the Scottish Education Department and is thus formally accountable to my right hon. and learned Friend. However, in practice it enjoys independence of professional judgment in the exercise of its functions, the conduct of its inspections and the content of its reports, although my right hon. and learned Friend is accountable for any decision to publish its advice. It is open to anyone who believes he has been unfairly treated in the course of Her Majesty's inspectors discharge of their duties to make representations to my right hon. and learned Friend or, in the last resort, to pursue complaints through the courts.

Geriatric Beds (Glasgow)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, for each of the separate district areas of the Greater Glasgow health board, the number of beds provided for geriatric care in each of the general hospitals.

Mr. John MacKay: Those general hospitals in Greater Glasgow with beds for geriatric patients are as follows together with respective number of beds and the area of the former districts of the Greater Glasgow health board in which they are situated:

Hospital	Number of beds	District
Stobhill General	236	Northern
Victoria Infirmary	256	South-Eastern
Southern General	190	South-Western
Gartnavel District General	50	Western

Belvidere Hospital

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total area of land belonging to Greater Glasgow health board at Belvidere hospital; how much is built upon at present; and how much of the remainder is suitable for building.

Mr. John MacKay: The Belvidere hospital site comprises 13·9 hectares of land, of which 2·8 hectares are built upon at present. Most of the remaining land is taken up by access roads and land between individual blocks or is affected by a geological fault. About 0·6 hectares appear to be suitable for building.

Eventide Beds (Glasgow)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many people are on the waiting list for an eventide bed in the eastern district of Greater Glasgow health board;

(2) what is the average wait for admission to an eventide bed in the eastern district of the Greater Glasgow health board;

(3) what is the shortfall in the number of eventide beds in the eastern district of the Greater Glasgow health board as recommended by the SHAPE report; and what plans are in hand to remedy this situation.

Mr. John MacKay: I assume the hon. Member's question refers to residential rather than hospital accommodation.

Statistics collected centrally on services and accommodation provided by local authorities and voluntary bodies in the social work field are related to local authority rather than health board areas. Waiting lists are not required to be maintained by local authorities on a uniform basis and the information collected on residential accommodation for the elderly and other client groups does not extend to any lists of this kind.

Hospitals (Visits)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospitals and which ones, within the eastern district area of the Greater Glasgow health board, have been visited within the last 12 months by (a) the general manager of health boards, (b) the chairman of the health board and (c) the Minister for health.

Mr. John MacKay: Although my noble Friend the Minister of State has visited hospitals elsewhere in Glasgow, neither he nor I have visited any hospitals in the former eastern district of the Greater Glasgow health board's area within the last 12 months. I am asking the chairman of the health board to write to the hon. Member about visits he has made.

Lightburn Hospital

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated cost, including alterations, of bringing Lightburn hospital up to the standards laid down by his Department; and when the necessary work will be completed.

Mr. John MacKay: This is a matter for the Greater Glasgow health board in the first instance and I shall ask the chairman of the board to write to the hon. Member.

Private Practice (Monitoring)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the arrangements for monitoring private practice carried out in National Health Service hospitals and health centres in Scotland; how many instances of monitoring have been carried out in the past two years; how many cases of abuse have come to light; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Routine information is not held centrally. The monitoring of private practice in National Health Service premises is a matter for the appropriate health board in the first instance. The Scottish Home and Health Department has, however, issued to health boards for comment a draft document revising previous guidance on the management of private practice in National Health Service hospitals. This will be issued in final form early next year.

General Practitioners (Private Practice)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioners in Scotland have declared that they have earned over 10 per cent. of the gross receipts of their practice by doing private practice within the past two years; and if he will break down these figures by health board areas.

Mr. John MacKay: One; in the Greater Glasgow health board areas.

Bathgate

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline his proposed timetable on the Rover plans for the Leyland site at Bathgate.

Mr. Ancram: I understand that a planning application was lodged with West Lothian district council on 15 December. It is a matter, in the first instance, for that council, but in view of the scale of the proposal my right hon. and learned Friend will be considering urgently whether to call it in for his own determination. He hopes to announce his decision next month.

Agricultural Buildings and Works

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to seek to amend the planning laws in respect of agricultural buildings and works.

Mr. Ancram: Yes. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 13 November, at columns 5-6.

Shipping Services

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial assistance he proposes for shipping services to the Scottish islands in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I propose to give a deficit grant of £6·9 million to Caledonian MacBrayne. For the second year running the company has performed well and made significant cost savings, particularly on fuel, which it expects to continue next year. Its funding requirement is therefore lower than this year. For P and O services to the Northern Isles, I propose to make available grant of £4·0 million and for the bulk shippers with whom I have undertakings I will make provision for grant of £1·35 million.

Total revenue support next year will be £12·25 million.

Hill Farming Review

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the annual hill farming review.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 16 December 1986]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Devon North (Mr. Speller) by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Industrial Counterfeiting

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prosecutions have been instituted by the Director of Public Prosecutions or the police in the past five years in respect of industrial or commercial counterfeiting;

(2) how many defendants have been convicted in the past five years for industrial or commercial counterfeiting offences; and what was the average sentence they received.

Mr. Mellor: The available information which may be incomplete, covers prosecutions under section 1 of the Trade Descriptions Act, 1968, and is given in the following table. The fine was the most common penalty for those convicted. Prosecutions for offences involving industrial or commercial counterfeiting may be brought under other legislation, but such cases cannot be separately identified.

Persons proceeded against under Trade Descriptions Act 1968 Section 1

Year	Total proceeded against	Total found guilty
1981	1,090	850
1982	1,110	860
1983	1,520	1,230
1984	1,500	1,140
1985	1,310	1,050

Metropolitan Police (Women Officers)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of women police officers and the ranks they hold in the Metropolitan police force as of 1 December.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The total number of women police officers serving in the Metropolitan police on 30 November 1986 was 2,634. The breakdown by ranks is as shown in the tables below.

	Number
Uniformed
Commanders	2
Chief Superintendent	2
Superintendent	3
Chief Inspector	5
Inspector	18
Sergeants	206
Police Constable	2,197

Detective Sergeant	29
Detective Constable	161
Total	201

Holloway Prison

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the therapeutic unit at Holloway prison was closed on 13 November; and what he is intending to do with the prisoners who were in the unit.

Mr. Mellor: The Holloway project committee noted (paragraph 6.11 of its report) that the pressure for remand places in recent years had made it impossible for the A5 therapeutic unit for drug dependents to continue as originally intended. It recommended (paragraph 6.21(ii)) that the unit should be discontinued until more sentenced women could be held in Holloway and that in the meantime individual and group psychotherapy should continue to be provided for a selected number of inmates. This recommendation was immediately accepted, and the unit was formally discontinued on 13 November. At that time, no prisoners on the unit were receiving group therapy; individual treatment is available for all prisoners at Holloway who are identified as having drug and other dependency problems.

Female Drug Addicts

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for the treatment of the increasing number of female drug addicts who are sentenced to terms of imprisonment by the courts.

Mr. Mellor: The prison and probation services are jointly exploring how opportunities for the continuing support of both female and male drug misusers sent to prison can be developed and better co-ordinated to help them resist a return to drugs after release.

Dog Fouling

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he intends to publish the model byelaws on dog fouling in public open spaces recommended by the recent working party on this subject; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will make a statement on the recent experiment involving four district councils which tested the suitability of draft model byelaws on dog fouling in public open spaces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are considering whether the results of the pilot scheme provide a sufficient basis on which to make the byelaws available for adoption by other local authorities, but expect to announce the conclusions we have reached shortly.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representation he has recently received concerning the publication of model byelaws on dog fouling of public open spaces;

(2) which local councils have contacted his Department requesting model byelaws on dog fouling of public open spaces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the pilot scheme ended on 1 September we have received representations from 12 hon. Members, 29 local authorities, and four other correspondents.

Since the pilot scheme began, the following local authorities have expressed interest in adopting the model byelaws:

HOME DEPARTMENT

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department's manual for guidance on the movement of nuclear weapons convoys has been issued to chief fire officers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Department does not produce such a manual. However, guidance on the role of the fire service at incidents involving radioactivity was given to the service in June 1984.

Police (Radioactivity)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what training policemen receive in the use of personal dosimeters, radiac survey meters, decontamination meters, breathing equipment and protective clothing;

(2) how many persons are employed by the police to train policemen in dealing with accidents involving radioactivity; and if he will list the areas of expertise covered;

(3) what facilities are available for the training of policemen in dealing with accidents involving radioactivity;

(4) how many days are allocated in the training of a police sergeant to dealing with accidents involving radioactive contamination; and what is the current amount of money allocated to the training of a police sergeant in dealing with such accidents;

(5) how many days are allocated in the training of a police constable to dealing with accidents involving radioactive contamination; and what is the current amount of money allocated for the training of a police constable in dealing with such accidents.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Training of this type is not organised centrally and is a matter for individual police forces. The advice and assistance available to the police on accidents involving radioactivity is described in the emergency planning guidance to local authorities. A copy is in the Library.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether organisations representing the police have been asked to make any submissions to the review of arrangements for nuclear accidents being undertaken by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No, but there will be appropriate consultation on matters relevant to the police raised in the review.

Drink-Drive Campaign

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what response he has had from chief constables to the Government's Christmas drink-drive campaign;

(2) if he will call for reports from chief constables about what extra police manpower will be devoted to Her Majesty's Government's drink-drive campaign this Christmas for each of the different police authority districts.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Association of Chief Police Officers has welcomed the theme of the Department of Transport's Christmas publicity campaign against drinking and driving. Decisions on the deployment of resources are a matter for individual chief officers of police, and the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, but the police service is committed to enforcing the law on drinking and driving all the year round.

Identification Cards

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Deaprtment what consideration has been given to the general adoption in the interest of security of a standard identification card for all representatives of public authorities in regular contact with members of the public.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: While it is most important that officials who may enter people's homes should carry proper identity cards and that the public should ask to see them before granting access, I am not convinced that their standardisation offers substantial advantages.

Martin Robert Rogers

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which Martin Robert Rogers, a constituent of the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch, collapsed in a coma at Brixton prison on 27 November;

(2) if the authorities at Brixton prison passed on all the personal and medical information needed by Kings College hospital on 27 November when Martin Robert Rogers was taken there in a coma; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he is satisfied with the treatment, medical and otherwise, received by Martin Robert Rogers whilst on remand at Brixton prison prior to his removal to Kings College hospital on 27 November.

Mr. David Mellor: We have no reason to doubt the adequacy of the treatment and medical attention Mr. Rogers received at Brixton prison where he was seen by a medical officer on reception on 26 November. He was given suitable medication for his immediate condition in the light of his account of his medical history. I understand that later on 26 November he had a fit from which he appeared to recover and sleep. He was observed at intervals during the night. Next morning he was examined by the medical officer and found to be comatose. The medical officer therefore arranged that he should be transferred to Kings College hospital accompanied by a letter giving details of his medical condition and history so far as it was known.

"Road Users and the Police"

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the conclusions regarding police/motorist relations in "Road Users and the Police".

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The research study by Mr. Dix and Mr. Layzell on "Road Users and the Police", carried out on behalf of the Police Foundation, was a small scale exploratory study of the impact of road traffic law enforcement on police public relations. The study suggested that contacts between the police and the public in this context could have a favourable effect on public perceptions of the police, and emphasised the importance of the use of discretion by police officers.

Boundary Commission

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Boundary Commission for England intends to conduct any further interim reviews of parliamentary constituencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: The Commission has informed me that, in addition to the interim review of 42 constituencies which it is presently undertaking, it intends to conduct interim reviews of 55 further constituencies under the powers provided in section 2(3) of the House of Commons (Redistribution of Seats) Act 1949. The constituencies to be included in this further review are as follows:

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce the name of the next deputy chairman of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England.

Mr. Hurd: The Lord Chancellor has appointed Sir John Knox, QC, to be deputy chairman of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England. The appointment is for a four-year period with effect from 1 January 1987.

Representation of the People Act 1985

Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the provisions of the Representation of the People Act 1985 will come into force.

Mr. Hurd: The relevant provisions of the Act come into force on 1 January for the purpose of elections held on or after 16 February 1987. From 1 January anyone who cannot reasonably be expected to vote in person at a particular election will be able to apply to the electoral registration officer to vote by post or proxy. This means that holidaymakers and people away on business trips who previously were unable to vote will now be able to do so. Application forms and leaflets explaining the new provisions will be available from electoral registration officers. Application forms will have to be completed and returned to the electoral registration officer not later than noon on the 13th working day before polling day. But it will be possible for people taken ill shortly before polling day to apply no later than noon on the sixth working day before the poll.

Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986

Mr. Butterfill asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 will come into operation.

Mr. Hurd: The main provisions of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 will be brought into force on 1 January 1987. The new Act was the result of painstaking work and close collaboration between Government, the scientific community and the moderate animal welfare movement. The new controls which it introduces will, when fully implemented, represent a real advance in the welfare of animals used in research, providing for effective and rigorous control of all experimentation on animals whilst at the same time allowing essential research and safety testing to be continued.

All of the new Act with the exception of the controls on the sources of the most commonly used laboratory animals will come into force on 1 January 1987. The introduction of the new controls and the conversion of existing work is a major task involving sustained detailed effort. The major innovation of the new Act — the project licence — will be established in a planned programme of work which will be completed by the end of 1988. Once this task is completed work will start on the inspection of establishments for designation as breeding or supplying establishments under the Act, so that the controls on the source of laboratory animals may be introduced as soon as possible.

The coming into force of this new Act is a notable landmark in the history of animal welfare. When in full operation it will be seen to provide for a rigorous and effective system of control over experiments on living animals. We have increased the size of the Inspectorate and provided additional administrative resources to ensure this. I am sure that the confidence of the many groups which supported this legislation during its passage will be fully vindicated.

Industrial Counterfeiting

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he is having with other Government Departments on the subject of industrial and commercial counterfeiting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, who consults ministerial colleagues as appropriate.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Corporal Punishment

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland under what powers he intends to make provisions for the cessation of corporal punishment in schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: Power to make such provision is contained in section 47 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Cigarette Tax

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax in total, including specific tax, and valorem tax and value-added tax, in pence per packet of 20 cigarettes is levied on (a) a packet of United Kingdom manufactured king size cigarettes retailing at £1·50 and (b) a packet of imported Virginia king size cigarettes retailing at £1·21.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Personal Incomes

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make an estimate of the number of taxpayers earning less than two thirds of median male earnings in 1986-87; and what proportion this group represents of all taxpayers.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1986, c. 776]: It is estimated that, in 1986-87, about 6 million single people and married couples, representing about 30 per cent. of taxpayers, are liable to tax on gross incomes of less than two thirds of median male earnings. (Median full-time, adult male earnings in April 1986 were £185·10 per week.)

SOCIAL SERVICES

Breast Cancer

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what the trials of breast cancer screening techniques conducted at eight United Kingdom centres since 1979 have established about the total cost of screening and the additional cost of clinical examinations.

Mrs. Currie: Professor Sir Patrick Forrest's report on breast cancer screening has recently been received and we are arranging for it to be published. The report includes an estimate of the cost of introducing breast cancer screening. However it would be inappropriate for me to quote extracts from the report in advance of its publication.

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the planned expenditure on the breast cancer screening programme in England and Wales for the current financial year; and what are the figures envisaged for the three succeeding financial years;

(2) if he will provides estimates of the cost of establishing a high-quality nationwide breast cancer screening programme (a) for all women over 40 years of age and (b) for all women over the age of 50 years.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total funding from his Department to London hospitals for breast cancer screening services.

Mrs. Currie: The sum of £556,000 is available this year from central expenditure to fund a series of trials on breast cancer screening. Decisions on whether to introduce a national screening programme will be made in the light of the report prepared by the working group chaired by Professor Sir Patrick Forrest which has recently been received by Ministers.

We are arranging for the report to be published. It includes an estimate of the cost of introducing breast cancer screening and its consequences. However it would be inappropriate for me to quote extracts from the report in advance of its publication.

Diabetics

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost to the National Health Service for the treatment of diabetes sufferers in the current financial year.

Mrs. Currie: It is not possible to distinguish all the costs to the National Health Service for the treatment of diabetes. The latest available information shows that the estimated cost of hospital in-patient treatment identified as being for diabetes was some £70 million in England in 1985-86, but this is likely to understate the cost of treating some secondary conditions which are identified under other headings. The cost of hyperglycaemic agents (including insulin), urine testing equipment and reuseable syringes and needles dispensed by community pharmacies under the NHS in England was some £35 million in 1985, the latest year for which figures are available. Separate costings are not available for other major elements in the treatment of diabetes — out-patient consultations and treatment, general practitioner services and drugs provided by hospital pharmacies.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish a table showing the number of cervical cancer smear tests conducted in each year from 1974 and the proportion of positive results;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the number of positive cervical cancer smear tests recorded in each year from 1974 and the proportion of those so detected who subsequently died.

Mrs. Currie: The available information is given in the table.

Information on the proportion of women with positive smear test results who subsequently die of cervical cancer is not held centrally. Some positive results indicate abnormalities other than cervical cancer or pre-cancer; some are from repeat tests on the same women; and some cancers or pre-cancers would never progress to more advanced stages of the disease. However it has been estimated that up to 80 per cent. of women who die from cervical cancer have never been screened.

Number of smears taken, positive results, results per thousand smears examined and number of deaths, England and Wales

Numbers (actual)

Year	All smears	Positive results	Positive results per 1,000 smears examined	Deaths from malignant neoplasm of the Cervix Uteri (ICD 80)

1975	2,498,000	11,911	4·8	2,143
1976	2,568,000	13,336	5·2	2,206
1977	2,545,000	14,952	5·9	2,145
1978	2,587,000	16,260	6·3	2,153
1979	2,749,000	17,333	6·3	2,087

1982	2,951,000	22,370	7·6	1,932
1983	3,200,000	24,836	7·8	1,959
1984	3,417,000	30,331	8·9	1,899
1985	3,897,000	35,752	9·2	1,957

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the average screening take-up rate for those health authorities which had a cervical cancer call and recall scheme in operation in 1985-86;

(2) what arrangements he has made to monitor the screening take-up rates of cervical cancer call and recall schemes.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested about take-up rate is not yet collected centrally. From 1988 the standard returns completed by health authorities should include information on numbers of women invited for screening, numbers who accept, and the proportion of the at-risk female population who have had a cervical cancer smear test within the last five years.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time from the date of application for invalid care allowance; how many claimants are still waiting to be dealt with; and what steps he is taking to reduce this period.

Mr. Major: As at 5 December, the latest date for which information is available, about 75,000 claims are awaiting decision. Most of these claims are held up by the need to make inquiries of a variety of sources, including the claimants themselves, to obtain further information. The average time taken to process a claim is currently 22·5 weeks. We are taking all practical steps to reduce this period.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the people in the United Kingdom who received supplementary benefit in the latest year for which statistics are available were of no fixed abode.

Mr. Lyell: Separate statistical information on the number of claimants without accommodation is not maintained for Great Britain and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Separate information is also not routinely maintained for Northern Ireland but a count in May 1986 showed 1,285 people claiming as having no accommodation.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people aged over 70 years currently receive mobility allowance; and how many presently in receipt of such benefit will lose it in 1989 as a result of their age.

Mr. Major: At 10 December 1986, there were 15,335 recipients of mobility allowance who were age 70 or over. Of this number, 9,345 qualified under eligibility criteria which include the upper limit of age 75 for the payment of the allowance. Recipients are due to reach this limit from 29 November 1989 onwards, but I regret that the number due to reach it in 1989 cannot be identified separately.

Funeral and Maternity Payments

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will announce the arrangement for the introduction of funeral and maternity payments under the social fund.

Mr. Major: We have laid before Parliament regulations which provide for payments to be made from the social fund to people on low incomes—whether in or out of work—for maternity and funeral expenses.

The regulations replace the existing provisions for maternity and funeral expenses made by the maternity and death grants of £25 and £30 respectively and the relevant supplementary benefit single payments for maternity and funeral needs. The new arrangements extend entitlement to people in low paid work as well as supplementary benefit claimants. Under these arrangements a maternity payment of £80 will be made for each new or adopted baby if the claimant or his/her partner is in receipt of supplementary benefit or family income supplement. For funerals, the full cost of a reasonable funeral will be paid if the claimant or his/her partner is in receipt of supplementary benefit, family income supplement, or housing benefit.

As with the existing supplementary benefit single payments scheme, any savings of over £500 held by the claimant or his family will be taken into account for both types of payment, the excess being offset against the amount paid. For funerals, provision is also made to take account of any of the assets of the deceased which are available to the claimant, when calculating the amount of any sum due. Any contribution made by another towards the cost of the funeral will also be taken into account. From April 1988, when a lump sum of £1,000 for widows will replace widows' allowance, amended regulations will ensure that this sum is disregarded for recent widows who need to claim either a maternity or funeral payment.

These regulations, the Social Fund Maternity and Funeral Expenses (General) Regulations 1986 and the Social Fund Maternity and Funeral Expenses (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1986, are made under sections 32(2) and 51(1) of the Social Security Act 1986 and will take effect from 6 April 1987. They include a number of consequential amendments to other regulations which arise out of these provisions. The regulations have not been referred to the Social Security Advisory Committee since, by virtue of section 61(5) of the Act, reference is not necessary for regulations made within twelve months of the Act coming into force.

Claim forms incorporating explanatory notes will be available to the public in the normal way from the middle of March 1987 onwards.

Registered Homes Act 1984

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he is satisfied with the working of the Registered Homes Act 1984; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to seek to amend the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) on 19 November at column 217, covering a study of the effects of the Act on residential care homes. When the report of the study is available we shall be taking stock of these registration arrangements and considering whether changes in them are needed. We have no other plans at this stage.

Bayer UK (Inducements)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has received from the Association of British Pharmaceutical Industries on its investigation into the allegation that Bayer UK is inducing doctors to prescribe its drugs on the false ground that they are contributing to a research project; and if it is normal practice for the results of such investigations to be sent to him.

Mr. Newton: In a letter of 15 December, the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry (ABPI) has communicated to the Department the results of its investigation into the allegations publicised on 10 September about promotion by Bayer UK Limited of Adalot Retard.

Bayer admitted that during the period in question company representatives had given doctors fees for assessments. They stated that this had not been company policy and that they had taken steps in June 1985 to ensure that this practice ceased, that it would not recur, and that the ABPI code of practice would be observed in all respects.

ABPI decided that these methods had brought discredit upon the pharmaceutical industry and ruled that there had been breach of its code of practice. ABPI also took a very serious view of the breach and determined to suspend the company's membership of ABPI indefinitely with immediate effect, while continuing to expect it to comply with the code of practice. ABPI will make a further review of Bayer's promotional activity.

ABPI's normal practice is to communicate the findings of its code of practice committee not only to the Department but to the Secretaries of the British Medical Association and of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain and to the editors of the British Medical Journal and of The Pharmaceutical Journal.

Community Care

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the proportions of the proceeds from sales of institutions emptied by the community care policy (a) remain in the hands of the health authorities and (b) are passed to social services departments of local authorities.

Mrs. Currie: It is open to health authorities to use the proceeds of sales for the development of local authority social services through joint financing arrangements, but the Department does not routinely collect information on the extent to which they do.

Health Service Pay (London Weighting)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the London weighting allowance for (a) nurses, (b) doctors and other members of the health service and (c) other employees associated with his Department.

Mr. Newton: The information is as follows:

1. Staff employed by health authorities within the former GLC area:

	£ per annum
a. Nurses, midwives, health visitors	877
b. Doctors and dentists	877
c. Ancillary staff	877
d. Staff employed in the London ambulance service	877

II. All other staff employed by health authorities:

	£ per annum
a. Inner London	1,133
b. Outer London	677

Notes
(i) The management side of the General Whitley Council's London weighting consortium recently offered increases on these rates back dated to 1 July 1986 to the staff side who, I understand, are currently consulting constituent associations on the offer.
(ii) Staff employed in certain extra-territorially managed units and in the so-called fringe area on the periphery of the former Greater London Council area receive allowances of £527 per annum and £149 per annum respectively.

III. Civil servants employed in the Department, depending on the location of their offices, receive the following allowances:

	£ per annum
a. Inner	1,465
b. Intermediate	840
c. Outer	615

These rates came into effect from 1 July 1986.

IV. Staff employed by social services Departments of local authorities, depending on the location of the centres from which they work, receive the following allowances:

	£ per annum
a. Inner	1,395
b. Outer	738
c. Inner fringe	333
d. Outer fringe	225

These rates came into effect on 1 July 1986.

Local Office (Archway Tower)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements exist at his Department's Archway Tower offices for making special payments after 3.30 pm on working days.

Mr. Lyell: Arrangements exist at the Department's Archway Tower offices to make payments after 3.30 pm. Members of the public who request immediate financial assistance after 3.30 pm may be admitted to the offices at the discretion of the managers. An urgent counter payment can be authorised where it is clear that the claimant cannot wait until the next day for his money.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action has been taken since 1 May to improve the public areas of his Department's Archway Tower offices.

Mr. Lyell: The Department has two offices located in Archway Tower-Highgate and Finsbury park local offices. In Highgate local office new floor covering has been fitted in the public areas and new seating has been installed in the supplementary benefit reception area. At the Finsbury park office an additional interviewing position has been provided in the supplementary benefits reception area.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action has been taken to (a) reduce asbestos, (b) repair the lifts, (c) clean the windows and (d) repair the staff door of Archway Tower since 1 May.

Mr. Lyell: The following action has been taken:

(a) The Property Services Agency regularly inspects all known asbestos in the building to ensure that it is in a safe condition. No asbestos has been removed since 1 May 1986.

(b) The lifts are routinely serviced and, in the event of a breakdown, an engineer is normally available within the building.

(c) External cradles have recently been commissioned and a window cleaning contract is being arranged to start in early 1987.

(d) The staff door was replaced on 16 September 1986.

Claims

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of London social security claims that have been referred to out of town offices of his Department.

Mr. Lyell: Currently the Department's London south region is arranging for arrears of claims for single payments in some London offices to be dealt with by outstationed units in Chatham and Broadstairs.

To date a total of 9,087 claims have been referred to these units. Of that number, 5,576 have been cleared completely and action continues on the remaining 3,511.

Medical Secretaries

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he has any plans to alter the present pay scales for medical secretaries working in the National Health Service;

(2) if he has any plans to alter the present gradings for medical secretaries working in the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: Pay scales and gradings for medical secretaries are matters for the administrative and clerical staffs Whitley Council but it is for employing health authorities to determine the appropriate grades of individuals posts.

Abortions

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of abortions performed on girls under the age of 16 years have been carried out in (a) non-National Health Service premises and (b) pay beds in National Health Service hospitals in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: The available information is shown in the table. The category of bed occupied in NHS hospitals is not collected in the notifications of abortions under the Abortion Act 1967. However, from the Hospital in-patient inquiry, a one in 10 sample of hospital discharges and deaths, it is estimated that of all women aged under 16 years whose pregnancies were terminated under the Act during the period 1981 to 1984, less than 1 per cent. occupied pay beds in NHS hospitals.

Percentage of all legal abortions to women, resident and non-resident aged under 16 years which were carried out in non-NHS premises England and Wales 1981 to 1985

Year	Percentage
1981	39·8
1982	40·5
1983	41·6
1984	42·8
1985	42·3

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken to monitor the number of abortions performed upon girls aged under 16 years in which the girl concerned signed the consent form for general anaesthetic.

Mr. Newton: The General Medical Council has issued guidance to doctors about the considerations to which a doctor should have regard before offering advice or treatment to a child below the age of 16 who consults him and is not accompanied by a parent or person in loco parentis. The principles set out in that guidance apply equally to all forms of treatment, including where a general anaesthetic forms part of the treatment. The Department does not routinely monitor the operation of these procedures.

Kidney Transplants

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for each year since 1976 the number of kidney transplants in the National Health Service, the estimated cost of the average kidney transplant in that year and the average period each kidney transplant patient lived after the transplant;

(2) what is the longest period anyone has lived after a kidney transplant in the National Health Service; and what are the mean and modal averages.

Mrs. Currie: According to data supplied by the United Kingdom transplant service, the number of cadaveric kidney transplants performed in the United Kingdom during the calendar years from 1976 was as follows:

	Number
1976	670
1977	779
1978	941
1979	842
1980	988
1981	905
1982	1,070
1983	1,144
1984	1,443
1985	1,334
[1]1986	1,363

[1] To end October.

A study undertaken in 1981 estimated the cost of a successful kidney transplant at between £5,000 and £5,700 in the year of operation (at 1981 prices). No other reliable financial information is available, but the real cost is likely to have risen because of the introduction of the drug Cyclosporin A, an immunosuppressant which significantly increases graft survival.

I am informed by European Dialysis and Transplant Association that, according to its latest information, a patient was living in 1985 whose implanted kidney had been functioning for 21 years.

Because of the number of variables involved (estimates of survival of patients still living who are on different immunosuppressive regimes, patients who have had more than one transplant, patients with a failed transplant now on dialysis etc.), it is impossible to derive meaningful "average" survival rates, whether the average be the arithmetic mean, the mode, the median, or any other measure.

Purine Research Laboratory

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the future of the Purine research laboratory at Guy's hospital; whether additional funds will be made available to ensure its survival; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Two letters from hon. Members have been received, and one from the consultant in charge of the unit. The funding of the unit is a matter for the health authorities concerned. The Lewisham and North Southwark health authority has enquired about possible supra-regional status for the unit. Any application for such designation would have to be submitted by the South East Thames regional health authority.

Prevention of Accidents

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement about his response to goals for reducing traffic, home and occupational accidents by the year 2000 set out in target II of the World Health Organisation's "Targets for Health for All";

(2) if he will make a statement on his Department's contributions for the reduction in the incidence and severity of injury in transport accidents during European Road Safety Year.

Mrs. Currie: The Department supports any measures designed to promote safety and to avoid accidents of every type. Officials have worked with the Department of Transport in their contribution to the European Road Safety Year and in road safety considerations generally. In that connection, we have continued to develop a major health education campaign to discourage drug misuse, and are expanding treatment and rehabilitation services for drug misusers. In September 1986, we contributed to an international symposium on young drivers: on alcohol and drug impairment.

We are assisting in preparation by the medical commission on accident prevention to hold a medical colloquium on behavioural aspects of accident prevention early in 1987. Consultation will also take place with other government Departments on progress towards the goals in target II of the World Health Organisation's "Health for All" initiative.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has decided on the circumstances in which the 2 per cent. incentive payment under the Social Security Act 1986 will be withheld from a personal pension held by someone who was previously in an occupational pension scheme.

Mr. Fowler: In draft regulations which are being issued for consultation today, we propose that the 2 per cent. incentive payment should not be made to a personal pension held by an employee who, without changing his employer, has left an occupational pension scheme which is contracted out of the State earnings-related pension scheme, after at least two years of membership. The incentive payment will be withheld if the only reason for the employee no longer being in the occupational scheme, when the necessary information is given to the Department by his employer, is that he chose to opt out.

Boarders

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he is considering for boarders under the reformed social security scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: In accordance with the undertaking that I gave to the House on 9 July at column 352, I am today issuing a consultative paper on the future benefit arrangements under the reformed social security scheme for the small minority of supplementary benefit claimants (about 2 per cent.) receiving ordinary board and lodging allowances. Copies of the document are available in the Vote Office.

Many of the difficulties which have arisen in this area stem from differences between the benefit arrangements for supplementary benefit boarders and other claimants which tend to create perverse incentives for landlords and claimants. Recent measures to tighten up the system have brought about improvements which could if necessary enable arrangements to continue on very similar lines into the future. However, the advent of the new income support scheme in April 1988 provides an opportunity to examine the scope for creating a simpler, more coherent framework for benefits to boarders while tackling effectively the problems of incentives and maintaining proper financial controls. The consultative document seeks views on the possibility that boarders as a group should no longer receive special higher rates but should instead be eligible for help with living costs from income support, including the premiums for family responsibilities, lone parenthood, old age and disability, in exactly the same way as other claimants.

Supplementary benefit boarders, like boarders in work and people paying rent, would thus get help with housing costs through housing benefit where it is already proposed to extend and strengthen the financial controls. If, subject to consultation, these proposals were implemented, whether from April 1988 or a later date, the present form of benefit limits would cease, but my Department would continue to apply special fraud and claims control procedures where appropriate. As local authorities are already responsible for help with accommodation costs for boarders in work, the proposals would not create a new responsibility. Nevertheless, the Government remain anxious to minimise the operational effects on authorities and are particularly anxious to take full account of the views of the local authority associations on these points.

In addition the paper invites comments on the future benefit treatment of people living in hostels. The current rules recognise the special nature of these establishments, and it is for consideration whether residents should continue to receive benefit on the same basis in future, or should be aligned with ordinary boarders or people in homes, in the light of the studies currently under way.

The Government will take careful account of the comments and representations received from the local authority associations and others by 20 February 1987 before reaching any final conclusions.

Agency Nurses

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will make a statement as to his policy towards the role of agency nurses in meeting the demand for nursing manpower in the National Health Service;

(2) what efforts the Government are making to reduce the need to call upon the services of agency nurses.

Mr. Newton: Circular HC(83)2 recognised that whilst nursing posts in the National Health Service should ideally be filled with directly employed full and part-time staff in order to ensure maximum continuity of patient care, reduction of management and supervision difficulties and provision of clinical training for nurse learners, suitable qualified staff are not always available in the particular locality. Where recruitment difficulties are encountered or where particular short term needs arise, the use of qualified staff from nurses' agencies can prove valuable.

The number employed in England at September 1985 was 4,120, about 1 per cent. of the total nursing and midwifery staff. However the number of agency nurses employed in the NHS has fluctuated over the years with large fluctuations between quarters in the same year.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the proportion of the national nursing budget which was given to agency nursing in the years: (a) 1979-80, (b) 1980-81, (c) 1981-82, (d) 1982-83, (e) 1983-84, (f) 1984-85 and (g) 1985-86, respectively.

Mr. Newton: Following is the information, derived from the annual accounts of health authorities in England:

Expenditure on non-NHS staff (Agency etc)—Nursing: as percentage of total salaries and wages expenditure—Nursing

Year	Per cent.
1979-80	1·81
1980-81	1·89
1981-82	1·69
1982-83	1·26
1983-84	1·07
1984-85	1·31
1985-86[1]	1·57

[1] Provisional figure.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of nursing manpower within the National Health Service is provided by agency nurses.

Mr. Newton: The number of agency nursing and midwifery staff employed in England at September 1985 was 4,120 in wholetime equivalent terms; about 1·0 per cent. of the total nursing and midwifery staff at that date.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for the latest available year the expenditure of each district health authority and special health authority on agency nursing and if he will give the totals for (a) Inner London, (b) Greater London, (c) each region and (d) England.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986, c. 48-9]: Following are the provisional figures shown by the annual accounts of health authorities for 1985-86:

ENVIRONMENT

Homeless People

15. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage greater use of empty homes to house homeless people.

Mr. John Patten: We are putting extra money in through housing associations and through our estates action initiative. I hope local authorities will now play their part in ending the scandal of council houses which stand empty when there are families without homes.

41. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of people in London who will be without shelter at Christmas.

Mr. Tracey: There is no comprehensive information on the number of people in London who will be without shelter at Christmas and my right hon. Friend is not in a position to make estimates.

Local Authorities (Privatisation)

16. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities which, since 1980, have contracted out, respectively, refuse collection, street cleaning, building cleaning, catering, vehicle maintenance or parks services to private companies and have subsequently returned them to direct labour operation.

Mr. Chope: My Department does not collect up-to-date information on this subject.

"Paying for Local Government"

17. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses were received to Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government".

18. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of comments received on "Paying for Local Government" were in favour of the community charge.

19. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now publish the list of those individuals and organisations which responded to Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government".

Dr. Boyson: I received a total of 1,217 responses to the Green Paper. A summary of responses has been placed in the Library. It includes a list of those organisations which responded.

56. Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now publish all the responses received by his Department to Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 4 November. A summary of responses has been placed in the Library.

70. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to publish a White Paper on local government finance in response to consultations on Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 4 November.

Wind Generators

20. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek powers to remove the application of rates from wind generators providing electricity in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have no plans to exempt electricity generating plants from rating. But all such plants, including wind turbines, are exempt when situated on agricultural land and used in connection with farming operations.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about his latest rate support grant proposals.

Mr. Ridley: I have received representations from a number of local authorities on my latest proposals for the 1987-88 rate support grant settlement. In addition, my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and I have seen deputations from a number of authorities and hon. Members.

29. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses have been received by his Department to his latest rate support grant consultation paper.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo).

31. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the local authorities of which he has seen representatives as part of the consultation process on the 1987-88 rate support grant settlement for England.

Mr. Chope: The Secretary of State, the Minister for Local Government and I have seen representatives from a number of local authorities. I have arranged for a list of those authorities to be placed in the Library.

44. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now proposes announcing the final rate support grant settlement for 1987-88.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend hopes to make a final announcement when the House returns in January.

57. Mr. George Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now publish the responses to his latest rate support grant 1987-88 consultation paper.

Mr. Chope: No. I shall of course, take into account the representations and comments made to me during the consultation period before I make decisions about the 1987-88 rate support grant settlement.

71. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state when final details of the 1987-88 rate support grant settlement will now be announced.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend hopes to make a final announcement when the House returns in January.

Rivers and Canals (Pollution)

22. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek new powers to counter pollution in rivers and canals.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am satisfied that the powers in part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 are generally adequate to deal with pollution of our rivers and canals. However, the Government have already identified some further changes which may be necessary, including the need for legislation to allow the setting of statutory quality objectives.

Council of Environment Ministers

23. Mrs. Roe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met his colleagues in the European Council of Environment Ministers; and what was discussed.

Mr. Waldegrave: I chaired the Council of Environment Ministers on 24 November. Details of the meeting were given in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) on 27 November at columns 318-20.

Ex-NCB Properties (Grants)

24. Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what level of improvement grants has been paid in respect of former National Coal Board properties now in private ownership.

Mr. Tracey: No information is collected by the Department on the number of improvement grants paid on former NCB properties.

Arlington Securities (Office Development)

25. Mr. John Hunt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek an early meeting with the London borough of Bromley to discuss the implications of his recent decision to allow the appeal by Arlington Securities against the refusal of planning permission by Bromley council in respect of the proposed office development at Bromley South; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: My hon. Friend is aware from the reply to his earlier question, answered on 19 November, that the London borough of Bromley has sought judicial review of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's decision to allow this appeal by Arlington Securities. Having given his decision, the Secretary of State has no further jurisdiction in the matter and is precluded from adding to or altering the decision in any way unless directed by the courts. My hon. Friend will appreciate that the matter is sub-judice and that in the circumstances it would not be proper for me to seek a meeting with the London borough of Bromley or to make a statement.

Run-down and Deprived Rural Areas

26. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to give assistance to run-down and deprived rural areas.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Development Commission, which is sponsored by my Department, is already carrying out an extensive programme of support, particularly in rural development areas, through factory building, advice and assistance for small businesses, and social, community and environmental improvements. As a measure of the importance the Government attach to this work, the commission received another £2 million in this year's public expenditure settlement.

M25 (Service Areas)

27. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to call in any planning applications for the provision of motorway service areas on the M25.

Mr. Waldegrave: Under the procedures for Crown development, as set out in my Department's circular 18/84, where the relevant local planning authority objects to what is proposed, the issue would normally come before me for decision. Where, however, the local planning authority does not object, the matter would not normally come to me for decision unless there were other objections which the developing Department considered were of such substance that it would be appropriate for me to make the decision.

Irish Sea (Pollution)

28. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the level of pollution caused by the recent accidental release of radioactivity into the Irish sea from Sellafield; and what representations he has received on this matter.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are no environmental or radiological implications from the incident at Sellafield on 27 November 1986. The only representations I have received were in the form of a question to which an answer is being sent.

49. Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to meet his Irish and Norwegian counterparts to discuss the radioactive contamination of the Irish Sea by the plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have received no request from either the Irish or the Norwegian Ministers for such a meeting.

Wildlife and Countryside Act

30. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek to amend the Wildlife and Countryside Act.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am satisfied that the Act is generally working well and have no immediate plans to amend it.

Sports Council (Grant)

32. Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Sports Council to discuss the Sports Council grant for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend met the chairman and vice-chairmen of the Sports Council on 2 December. There was a useful exchange of views on the background of its grant settlement for 1987-88. The council's programmes and priorities for the future were also discussed.

Urban Development Corporations

33. Mr. Knowles asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received about the setting up of four new urban development corporations.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend and I have received many representations about the new urban development corporations. We have been encouraged by the positive response these proposals have received.

International Year of Shelter for the Homeless

34. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to mark the 1987 United Nations International Year of Shelter for the Homeless.

39. Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has any plans to mark the 1987 United Nations International Year of Shelter for the Homeless.

Mr. Tracey: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Members for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft) and Knowsley, South (Mr. Hughes) on 8 December.

National Parks

40. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet the Countryside Commission to discuss the conservation powers and duties of national parks.

Mr. Waldegrave: Although my right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to meet the Countryside Commission, we are currently consulting it, and other interested bodies, about proposals to empower local planning authorities to make landscape conservation orders in the national parks and the Broads.

Rating Reform

35. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the outcome of his meeting on 25 November with the joint delegation of local government associations on the Government's proposals for reform of the rating system.

Mr. Chope: The meeting referred to was with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, together with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment, for Scotland and for Wales.

There was agreement on all sides that the present rating system is unsatisfactory. The local authority associations asked for time to find a consensus on an alternative to the present system which would meet the Government's objectives of greater fairness and accountability. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister drew attention to the fact that the associations' individual responses to the Green Paper provided no basis for believing that a consensus which met those objectives could be found and pointed out that such a consensus had not emerged over the many years in which this question had been under consideration by successive governments.

London Docklands Development Corporation

36. Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had from the local authorities which cover London docklands about the work of the London Docklands Development Corporation.

Mr. John Patten: Representations from the three docklands boroughs over the past 12 months have included four letters about individual planning applications, and two joint memoranda about the LDDC's approach to regeneration.

Historic Buildings and Monuments

37. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list his responsibilities for the conservation of historic buildings and monuments.

Mr. Waldegrave: Besides his statutory powers in connection with the listing of historic buildings and scheduling of ancient monuments, my right hon. Friend is responsible for the care of many historic buildings and monuments in Crown ownership or guardianship, including those managed on his behalf by the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission for England, to which my Department provides grant in aid. The Department also provides financial support to the National Heritage Memorial Fund and certain other bodies concerned with the built heritage.

Inner Urban Areas

38. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to examine the social problems of inner urban areas before deciding the 1987-88 rate support grant.

Mr. Chope: Grant-related expenditure assessments reflect the social problems of inner urban areas. My right hon. Friend announced in a consultation paper issued on 3 October changes he proposed to make to those assessments for 1987-88.

Estuarial Development

42. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will undertake a study to assess the effect on wildlife of the present proposals to carry out a range of developments in the estuaries of England and Wales.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have no plans for an overall study at present. However, we shall continue to ensure that the effects of estuarial developments in particular areas on wildlife are fully examined, together with all other relevant factors.

Development Commission

43. Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied with the structure and funding of the Development Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Development Commission keeps under review ways of improving its organisation, and that of its agency the Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas, so that it can respond more effectively to rural needs. In recognition of the important part the commission plays in rural areas the Government have increased the funds available to it next year by £2 million.

Waverley Borough Council

45. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how his revised rate support grant proposals affect Waverley borough council.

Mr. Chope: Waverley borough council's block grant entitlement for spending at the level of expenditure assumed in the revised proposals for the 1987-88 rate support grant settlement is £621,000, an increase of £124,000 on the earlier proposals. These figures imply an increase in Waverley's local rate of about 3·7 per cent. If Waverley keeps its spending down to the level of inflation, its local rate could rise by less then 1 per cent.

Noxious Emissions

46. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action the Government are taking to curb the emission of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide into the atmosphere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) on Wednesday 19 November.

Home Improvement Grant

47. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding the operation of home improvement grant schemes.

Mr. John Patten: I have received no recent representations about the operation of the home improvement grant system. However, I have just received proposals by the Association of Metropolitan Authorities for major changes to the legislation, which we are currently studying.

Nature Conservancy Council

48. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet the Nature Conservancy Council to discuss environmentally damaging operations within sites of special scientific interest.

51. Mr. Cunliffe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet the Nature Conservancy Council to discuss planning controls.

Mr. Waldegrave: I and my officials will continue to meet and work closely with the Nature Conservancy Council whenever circumstances require.

Planning Circulars

50. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about planning circulars currently emanating from his Department.

Mr. Tracey: Only one planning circular has been issued in the last six months: circular 17/86 (Welsh Office 50/86), which explains the provisions of the Town and Country Planning (Agricultural and Forestry Development in National Parks etc) Special Development Order 1986. The circular was issued in draft for public consultation. We have received no representations on its contents since it was issued.

Performance Reviews

52. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent measures he has taken or proposes to take to encourage councils and local authority auditors to conduct performance reviews for services.

Dr. Boyson: The Audit Commission's auditors regularly review performance of local authorities as part of their statutory duty to make recommendations for improving economy, efficiency and effectiveness in the provision of services. They have identified vast scope for improvements which I continually encourage councils to make. The authorities which complain most about lack of resources are all too often the ones whose existing services provide poorest value for money.

Public Sector Housing

53. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Government's plans for future investment in public sector housing.

Mr. Tracey: As my right hon. Friend announced on November 6, the gross provision for capital expenditure on housing by local authorities in England in 1987-88 will be £2,922 million. It is for local authorities to decide how to use these increased resources, but we look to them to give first priority to renovation and maintenance of their existing housing stock. Investment plans for the Housing Corporation were announced in the answer given by my hon. Friend on 9 December to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart).

Community Architecture

54. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage community architecture.

Mr. Tracey: The Department already supports community architecture through its funding of the Housing Corporation, estate action, the urban programme, and its special grants programme.

Council House Sales

55. Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council tenants have exercised their right to buy to date since the enactment of the Houseing Act 1980.

Mr. Tracey: Up to June 1986, 554,800 council tenants in England had exercised their right to buy their home.

Inner City Regeneration

58. Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the expenditure in 1979-80 and what it will be in 1987-88 on programmes and grants funded by his Department for the purpose of regenerating the inner cities.

Mr. John Patten: In 1979-80 expenditure on the urban programme and derelict land reclamation in England and totalled £197 million. In 1987-88 provision for the urban group of programmes, which is comprised of the urban programme including urban development grant, urban regeneration grant, derelict land reclamation and the urban development corporations, is £532 million (net of reciepts). This is an increase of about 62 per cent. in real terms.

In addition, a number of the Department's other expenditure programmes contribute to the regeneration of the inner cities, including the additional housing allocations provided by estate action for tackling run down housing estates.

PRC Homes

59. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish an up-to-date list of approved schemes for the repair of PRC homes and of the contractors responsible for each such scheme.

Mr. John Patten: Yes, as I indicated in my reply of 1 December to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Bar

(Mr. Rooker) at column 522 I have arranged for PRC Homes Ltd's progress reports, which give this information, to be placed in the Library as they become available.

Planning Controls

60. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider extending the present system of planning controls to agricultural land.

Mr. Tracey: No.

European Year of the Environment

61. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the European Year of the Environment.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend, my noble Friend and I have received a number of representations about European Year of the Environment which begins next March. These illustrate a growing interest in the preparations of the United Kingdom's national committee (on which my right hon. Friend serves) and an eagerness to participate. Our recent announcement that HRH the Prince of Wales has agreed to become United Kingdom patron of EYE is a further great encouragement to all concerned. My department is providing financial and administrative support to the national committee and, along with other departments, will be contributing directly to the programme of events and activities. I shall give my personal support to as many events in Britain as possible. I was particularly happy, during the United Kingdom's Presidency of the Community, to be able to welcome Commissioner Clinton Davis and his EC-wide steering committee to a London meeting this week and to hear about the development of its plans.

Domestic Rates

62. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average domestic rate demand per capita in 1979-80; what is the figure in the current year; and what percentage change this represents.

Mr. Chope: The average unrebated domestic rate bill per capita of the adult population in England was £77·9 in 1979-80 and £203·9 in 1986-87. This represents a change of 162 per cent.

Rent Arrears

63. Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate what steps he is taking to encourage local authorities to reduce rent arrears.

Mr. John Patten: I refer to the answer I gave my hon. Friend on Wednesday 10 December 1986 at column 188.

North-East (New Town Corporations)

64. Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of the north-east new towns corporations.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Home Improvement Agency Centres

65. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will report progress on the setting up of 50 home improvement agency centres.

Mr. Tracey: Responsibility for establishing agency service schemes rests with Care and Repair Ltd. and with the National Home Improvement Council. Care and Repair Ltd. have now given approval in principle to five schemes which are expected to start early in the new year: in Wigan, Newham, Bristol, Leicester and Liverpool. I understand that the National Home Improvement Council is in discussion with a number of local authorities and hopes to reach agreement shortly on schemes in Buxton and Coalville.

Right to Repair Scheme

66. Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the operation of the tenants' right to repair scheme.

Mr. Tracey: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on Monday 1 December 1986 at columns 520-1.

Acid Rain

67. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has plans to revise Her Majesty's Government's proposals for measures to combat acid rain following the breakdown of talks between European Economic Community Environment Ministers in Brussels on 25 November.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. Although some countries regarded the proposals tabled by the United Kingdom Presidency as too onerous, and so were unable to agree to them, we continue to hope that these proposals may help find a basis for agreed Community-wide measures to tackle the problem of acid rain. Talks on the United Kingdom Presidency proposals are continuing at official level.

Departmental Land Register

68. Mr. Heywood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much land has been removed from his Department's register of unused and underused land since it was established; and for what reasons.

Mr. John Patten: Since the registers were first established in 1981, some 45,000 acres of land have been removed. The main reasons for removal are sales (25,000 acres) and because the owner has brought the land back into use (8,000 acres).

Peak Park Planning Board

69. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many people appointed by county councils to serve on the Peak park planning board live within the area of the board's jurisdiction.

Mr. Waldegrave: Of the 12 members of the Peak park joint planning board appointed by the county councils of Derbyshire, Staffordshire and Cheshire, two currently live within the national park.

Council Laundries

72. Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect losses sustained by council laundries have on those councils' grant-related expenditure.

Mr. Chope: No specific provision is made in grant related expenditure assessments for losses sustained by council laundries.

Haringey Borough Council

73. Mr. Powley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek a meeting with the leaders of Haringey borough council.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has no plans for such a meeting at present.

Green Belt Development

74. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards applications to build large shopping and leisure centres in the green belt.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer this question shortly.

Derelict Urban Areas

75. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures his Department is taking to improve the environment in derelict urban areas.

Mr. John Patten: We have increased the resources available for derelict land grant in England from £23·5 million in 1979-80 to £84·4 million in 1986-87, targeting this money on urban and particularly inner city areas. Thirteen rolling programmes totalling over £24 million have been established this year in areas of extensive dereliction to uplift the environment and encourage new private sector activity. We have also increased urban programme resources since 1980 from some £90 million to over £300 million now.

This year alone some £35 million will be spent on environmental improvement to derelict or degraded land in urban areas under this programme. In addition urban development grant of £70 million has been approved since its inception in 1982 which will result in the reuse of some 560 acres of urban land or buildings that were derelict. The hon. Gentleman will also know that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently announced the setting up of four further urban development corporations.

Urban Programme (Job Creation)

76. Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has estimates of the numbers of jobs created or retained by urban programme funding.

Mr. John Patten: It is estimated that expenditure under the urban programme in 1986-87 on projects designed to improve employment prospects in partnership and programme authority areas will create or preserve about 24,000 jobs. This figure excludes temporary jobs created by some £110 million of UP funded construction work in these areas, and around 5,000 workers in UP-funded posts. In addition, schemes approved since 1983 for urban development grant, which forms part of the UP, are expected to create or retain about 23,000 jobs.

Political Advisers

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many political advisers and equivalent staff are employed, and at what full year cost, by each of the following local authorities (a) Liverpool, (b) Knowsley, (c) St. Helens, (d) Manchester, (e) Oldham, (f) Rochdale, (g) Kirklees, (h) Leeds, (i) Brent, (j) Haringey (k) Southwark and (l) the Inner London Education Authority.

Mr. Chope: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has made any recommendations to local authorities concerning the appointment of political advisers and equivalent staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: No, we are considering the question in the light of responses to the Widdicombe report.

Unemployed Workers Centres

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has made any recommendations to local authorities concerning expenditure on unemployed workers' centres and similar establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: We have made no general recommendations to local authorities on this subject.

Housing

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the role of local housing authorities in providing new accommodation for categories other than special needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The main priority for local authorities must be the renovation and repair of their existing housing. For new accommodation to rent, our main aim is to diversify the supply and increase the choice available to tenants by creating opportunities for private sector organisations to become involved in meeting a wider range of housing needs. Local authorities are ideally placed to co-ordinate and encourage participation in this task by a variety of agencies, including building societies, other financial institutions, private developers, and housing associations.

Mr. Janner: asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applicants were waiting for housing in the city of Leicester in January 1979, January 1986 and at the latest date for which records are available; and how many individuals it is estimated that such applications represent.

Mr. Tracey: The only available information is from the 1986 housing investment programme returns. These returns included the number of households on the waiting list at 1 April 1986 and the increase or decrease since April 1985, and the figures for Leicester are listed in columns B51 and B53 on page 4.11 of the "HIP1 (1986) all items print" which is available in the Library.

Information on the number of people within these households is not available centrally, but the hon. and learned Member may be able to obtain figures from the city council.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to make an announcement before the parliamentary Adjournment for Christmas concerning the proposed transfer to Edinburgh of the Glasgow area office of the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Chope: I am still considering various aspects of the reorganisation of the Property Services Agency. I will announce my decision as soon as possible.

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Eastwood on 5 November, Official Report, column 441, he is now able to estimate the costs of transferring the Glasgow area office of the Property Services Agency to Edinburgh in the 1987-88 and 1988-89 financial years.

Mr. Chope: There is nothing I can add to my reply to the 5 November at column 441.

Housing (Multiple Occupation)

Mrs. Golding asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he completed his study of houses in multiple occupation in England and Wales published by his Department; what were his conclusions; whether he plans to further control and improve conditions in this type of accommodation; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The report of the first stage of the research "Houses in Multiple occupation in England and Wales —a report of a postal survey of Local authorities" was published on 29 May 1986. The report of the second stage, a physical and social survey of some 550 HMOS will be published early next year. The response to the research will follow.

Mr. Kevin Finch

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking in relation to the correspondence sent to him by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe from Mr. Kevin Finch of 29 Parkend road, Manchester 23; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: A reply by my right hon. Friend will be sent to the right hon. Member shortly.

Home Owners

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures available for the number of home-owners in (a) Derbyshire and (b) Amber Valley; how this compares with the years 1979 and 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The latest available figures for Derbyshire are from the 1981 census which counted 198,453 households who were owner-occupiers, representing 59·9 per cent. of all the households present on census night. The corresponding figures for Amber Valley are 28,099 and 69·3 per cent.

Since 1979 there has been an unparalleled growth in owner-occupation in Britain, as a result of the measures introduced to enable tenants to buy council housing. The following sales of council houses and flats in Derbyshire have been reported:

	Derbyshire	Amber Valley
April 79-March 83	[1]10,725	931
April 83-Sept 86	[2]6,247	681

[1] Quarterly return from 1 authority missing.
[2] Quarterly returns from each of 2 authorities missing.

Agriculture Buildings and Works

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning his proposals for extending planning controls over agricultural buildings and works; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: Following my right hon. Friend's announcement on 13 November of our proposals to extend planning controls to new livestock buildings and associated structures erected within 400 metres of residential and other property, we have received several representations; the majority seeking clarification of the proposed controls.

Urban Programme

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will exercise flexibility in applying during the current financial year the criteria governing distribution of urban programme funding to economic, environmental and social projects, and between capital and current projects when he considers applications for funding of projects in the voluntary sector in Southwark; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: Any further bids in the current financial year will be considered on their merits against Ministerial guidelines.

In considering the bids put forward by Southwark for urban programme funding in 1987-88, all existing commitments to voluntary sector projects approved under the traditional urban programme will be honoured. New projects in 1987-88 will have to comply with guidelines which emphasise the importance of capital, economic and environmental schemes. Nevertheless, the new Programme Authority status of Southwark means that the level of resources available for new projects in 1987-88 from the voluntary sector is likely to be higher than this year.

Mortgage Arrears

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number and names of local authorities which publish the names of people in mortgage arrears in publicly available committee minutes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: None. It is for each local authority to decide what to include in its council or committee minutes. They have a discretion, under the provisions of schedule I to the Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985, not to make public information relating to the financial or business affairs of any particular person, or to any particular applicant for, or recipient of, any service provided by the authority, which they would otherwise be required to make public under that Act.

Costing Figures (Review)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment further to his reply to the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) on 8 December, Official Report, column 28, whether the review of costing figures now in progress will take account of compensation measures; if he will describe the extent of this review; when he expects this review to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The current review of disposal costs is in the first instance a matter for UK NIREX Ltd.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will direct the London residuary body to pay the fees associated with a transfer of ex-Greater London Council mortgagers to building societies.

Mr. Tracey: No. It is for borrowers themselves to decide whether or not they wish to pay such fees in order to have their mortgage transferred to building societies.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 12 December, Official Report, column 280, why only 5,000 ex-Greater London Council mortgagors were written to by the London residuary body with an offer to refinance their mortgages; and what information he has on the take-up.

Mr. Tracey: These are matters for which the London residuary body is responsible.

London Marathon

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has now received about the future organisation of the London marathon.

Mr. Chope: None since my hon. Friend's answer of 19 November at column 236.

Planning (Select Committee Report)

Sir Hugh Rossi asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is ready to respond to the Fifth report of the Select Committee on the Environment of Session 1985-86, relating to appeals, call-in and major public inquiries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The Government are responding today to the Select Committee's Fifth Report, on "Planning: Appeals, Call-in and Major Public Inquiries", in the form of a command paper. They welcome the Committee's report and set out in detail the measures the Government are taking to improve the operation of these aspects of the planning system.

The Government's policy is to simplify the planning system and to improve its efficiency without reducing the quality of decision or the ability of those who may be affected to make representations which are relevant to the decision. It remains the Government's objective to strike the right balance between the needs of development and the interests of conservation, and I believe that the measures described in the Government's response will ease the burden on all those involved in disputed planning cases while still ensuring that the interests of conservation remain fully protected.

The Select Committee's report recorded the initiatives which the Government are taking towards these objectives — in the Housing and Planning Act 1986, through changes to secondary legislation, and in other ways. The Government are grateful that many of its measures have the support of the Select Committee.

The response explains that procedural changes are being introduced which will cut out unnecessary delays in the handling of planning appeals, particularly those requiring public local inquiries. The changes include the setting of strict target timetables for the procedural stages, and proposals for streamlining inquiry procedures through a revision of the inquiries procedure rules supported by a code a practice on preparing for major inquiries. A special study to identify ways of speeding up long-running inquiries has also been put in hand.

The Government's objective for major inquiries is that the system should be as efficient and effective as possible, while not impairing in any way the fairness and impartiality of the procedures. A consultation paper with the proposals for revision of the inquiries procedure rules and a revised draft of the code of practice is being issued today. The texts are appended to the command paper.

London (Barrier Flood Plan)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) why the Greater London Council's flood control centre has been closed;

(2) what arrangements he has made to maintain the former Greater London Council's post barrier flood plan;

(3) which authority is responsible for operating the Greater London co-ordination centre in the Kingsway; and what financial and staffing resources are available to operate it.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986, c. 30]: The operation of the post barrier flood plan is a matter for the London boroughs to consider in consultation with the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority. In 1982 the Greater London council's flood control centre was subsumed in the Greater London emergency co-ordination centre which is now operated by the LFCDA. My right hon. Friend has given the authority sanction, under section 19 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982, to incur expenditure of £76,000 in the current financial year towards the costs of operating the centre.

DEFENCE

Defence Depots

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the reports of the central contracts team looking into the putting out to contract of defence depots are to be issued to trade unions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information has been given to trade unions regarding contract compliance as to conditions of employment and so on, where putting out to contract has taken place at defence depots.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the current work of the central contractorisation team at the RAOC Central Ordnance Depot, Bicester, in preparing a statement of requirement for the administrative support functions which the Department proposes to put to contract. This will form the basis of invitations to tender and will be sent to the trade unions when they are issued. The terms and conditions of service of a contractor's employees are matters to be decided between the contractor and his employees or the trade unions representing them.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the measures followed by his Department to ensure the security of defence depots in cases where contracts are put out to tender; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: MOD will retain overall responsibility for security at all defence establishments, including those where work has been placed out to contract. Contractors' personnel will be subject to the establishment's security regulations and procedures. MOD headquarters approval will be required before they can be allowed access to classified information.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the policy of his Department as to the security classification of work, papers and so on in the event of contracts being put out to tender at defence depots.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Contractors having access to classified information or materials will be required to protect them to the same standards as are required of MOD personnel. The effectiveness of their security measures is monitored by or on behalf of MOD.

Pensions

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now seek to pay pensions for retired service personnel linked to the full rate of salary as recommended by the review body during 1976 to 1977 and 1983 to 1986; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The rates of salary recommended by the Armed Forces Pay Review Body in 1976 and 1977 were implemented, and pensions awarded to service personnel retiring in the periods during which those rates were in force were linked to rates of pay in the normal way. Service personnel retiring in the period 1983 to 1986, when implementation of pay levels recommended by review bodies were staged or delayed, received pensions related to the salaries of their rank current at the date of retirement with the exception of the special arrangements described in the written answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) on 13 April 1984, at column 383. There are no plans to depart from the principles described in that answer.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the Officers' Pensions Society regarding retired pay for those who retired before 1960 without recognition for their service beyond the age of 55 years; and what action he intends to take in this matter.

Mr. Freeman: No representations have been received and no action is contemplated. Cost considerations and the likely repercussions on other service and public service pensions rule out any possibility of giving retrospective effort to changes made to the armed forces pension scheme since 1960.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will seek to amend the service retired pay code so that a service man or woman retiring during 1986 before 30 June receives the same rate of pension as someone retiring after 1 July; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No. All new pensions beginning before and after 30 June 1986 have been or will be correctly related to salaries in payment at the time of retirement in accordance with the principles set out in my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's written answer to the hon. Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) on 13 April 1984, at column 383.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence what would be the cost to public funds of uprating the pensions of all service widows on the pre-1960 service retirement codes from one-third of the forces family pension to one-half; what is the number of widows on the pre-1960 codes; and what action he intends to take in this matter.

Mr. Freeman: There are about 40,000 service widows on pre-1960 pension codes. Some receive pensions based on the minimum rate for their husbands rank, others receive pensions based on one third of their husbands pensions. Data from which to estimate the cost of increasing these pensions to half rate forces family pensions are not readily available. I regret I am unable to single out these particular widows for exceptional treatment from all the others receiving pensions at the third rate.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much a colonel retiring from the Army (a) at the compulsory retirement age in April after 37 years' service and (b) after 1 July with 35 years' service will receive by way of pension; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The maximum rate of pension for an officer is achieved on completing 34 years reckonable service. On compulsory retirement at age 55 in April 1986, or after 1 July 1986, the maximum rates of pension applicable to a colonel were £13,224 pa and £14,323 pa respectively.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Civil Service jobs in his Department have been lost due to contracting out in the past five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Between 1 April 1981 and 31 March 1986 there was a manpower saving of 7,025 United Kingdom-based civilians as a result of contracting out defence tasks.

Non-combatant Duties (Injuries)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men in the Army have been invalided out due to injuries received during non-combatant duties, in the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: Six hundred and sixty-nine United Kingdom Regular British Army personnel have been medically discharged in the period 1976 to 1985 inclusive principally because of injuries sustained in the course of service non-combatant duties.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men in the Royal Air Force have been invalided out, due to injuries received during non-combatant duties in the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: Sixty-nine United Kingdom Regular Air Force personnel have been medically discharged in the period 1976 to 1985 inclusive principally because of injuries sustained in the course of service non-combatant duties.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men in the Royal Navy have been invalided out, due to injuries received during non-combatant duties in the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: Two hundred and two United Kingdom Regular Navy and Royal Marine personnel have been medically discharged in the period 1976 to 1985 inclusive principally because of injuries sustained in the course of service non-combatant duties.

Nuclear Weapons Convoy, Burghfield

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Defence who was officially informed of the passage through south Yorkshire of a nuclear weapons convoy on 27 November en route to the Royal Ordnance Factory at Burghfield.

Mr. Stanley: For security reasons, it has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on the routes or methods used to transport nuclear weapons. I also refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) on 11 December 1984, at column 900.

Nimrod

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Nimrod aircraft are currently in service with the armed services.

Mr. Stanley: I refer my hon. Friend to annex E "Strength of the Royal Air Force" in vol. 1 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986" (Cmnd. 9763-1). It is not our practice to reveal details of numbers of operational aircraft.

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost at 1986 prices of the Nimrod aircraft currently in service with the armed services (a) when they were first commissioned and (b) at the present day, including the costs of any updating or improvements.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I shall answer shortly.

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the expected life of the Nimrod aircraft at present in service with the armed services.

Mr. Stanley: We expect Nimrods to be in service with the RAF into the early years of the next century.

Flight Simulator Training System

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Defence what factors led to his decision to accept an American bid in preference to Marconi for supply to the RAF of a flight simulator training system for the Harrier jet.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The decision was based on the results of a wide-ranging technical and commercial assessment of all the alternatives. The selected system was both demonstrably cheaper and technically superior to the other proposals.

Airborne Early Warning System

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to date of payments to the General Electrical Company and associated contractors; and how much has been committed for subsequent payments in connection with the airborne early warning system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To date some £660 million at outturn prices has been spent or committed on the Nimrod AEW project. This equates to £930 million at average 1986-87 outturn prices. Both figures include VAT.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting on 13 and 14 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made in the House earlier today.

Brazil (Exports)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the exports from the United Kingdom of milk and milk products to Brazil since 1 January.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is set out in the table:

United Kingdom Exports of Milk and Milk Products to Brazil from January to October 1986

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Speller asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has completed the review of the economic conditions in the hill and upland areas; and if he will make a statement on the rate of hill livestock compensatory allowances and associated conditions for 1987.

Mr. Jopling: My right hon. Friends and I have now completed the annual autumn review of economic conditions in the hills and uplands.

The Government continue to recognise the fundamental importance of the livestock sector to the less favoured areas of the United Kingdom and, following the average increase of 11 per cent. in the 1986 compensatory allowances, total HLCA payments are currently running at about £110 million a year. The 1986 increase in rates, and the special aid of about £16·9 million paid to those livestock farmers most seriously affected by last year's exceptionally bad weather conditions, have contributed significantly to the returns of farmers in the LFAs. Although we recognise that some sectors and some areas are doing less well than others, the economic outlook for hill and upland livestock producers generally is very much better than it appeared this time last year. Moreover, producers with beef cows and sheep in the LFAs will benefit from the green rate devaluations which have just been agreed. In the light of our review, and having regard to the public expenditure position, my colleagues and I have decided that the rates of hill livestock compensatory allowance should be maintained at their present levels for 1987, and that the associated conditions should also remain unchanged.

Farmers

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers in England are owner-occupiers ; how many tenant farmers there are farming over three hectares; and what were the corresponding figures for 1966 and 1976.

Mr. Donald Thompson: At the 1985 agricultural census, the last available, the recorded number of wholly or mainly owner-occupied farms in England was 109,000. There were 44,800 wholly or mainly rented farms and, of these, 42,500 were over 3 hectares. The corresponding figures for 1976 are not comparable with these because of the change of threshold in 1980 for inclusion in the annual census. There are no corresponding statistics for1966.

Trent Grain Company

Mr. Ashley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what comments, and when, were made by the business reporting agency used by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce to report on the financial position of the Trent Grain Company;

(2) on which dates a stock loss at Trent Grain was (a) suspected and (b) confirmed; and what action was taken after the earlier date to (i) minimise the possibility of further stock losses, (ii) recover the suspected loss and (iii) investigate the financial position of the company;

(3) whether his Department has obtained a copy of the 1985 annual report of the Trent Grain Company.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Parry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now make it his practice to list the sites of European Economic Community intervention butter stores.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 16 December 1986]: The locations of all United Kingdom intervention stores including those containing butter were given in my reply to the hon. Member for Dundee, West (Mr. Ross) on 2 December 1986, at column 589.

Mr. Parry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many locations in Liverpool are used for European Economic Community intervention butter stores.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 16 December 1986]: There are at present five stores in Liverpool containing intervention butter.

TRANSPORT

Merchant Ships (Surveys)

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report those types of survey of merchant ship hulls and machinery carried out on his behalf; how many surveys of each type were undertaken in the most recently available 12-month period; how many of these surveys were carried out by his own surveyors and how many by outside agencies acting on his behalf; how many of the surveys carried out by his surveyors duplicated surveys carried out by other agencies; and what assessment he has made of the scope for further simplification or delegation of his survey work.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Statutory survey of hulls and machinery of merchant ships are carried out in respect of the issue of passenger ship safety certificates, cargo ship safety construction certificates and load line certificates. These surveys are undertaken on a continuous basis over a five-year cycle and the figures requested are not readily available in any 12-month period.

Surveys required for the issue of the cargo ship safety construction certificate and the load line certificate—which constitutes a major proportion of this work—have been delegated to five classification societies—the Department's surveyors dealing only with those ships which are not "classed". Although precise figures are not available for the classification societies involved it is estimated that they issue more than six times the number of certificates issued by my Department. There is no duplication of work.

In the case of foreign-going passenger ships the survey of hull and machinery is undertaken by my Department and where a ship is "classed" also by the classification society. In 1985 a total of 85 passenger ship safety certificates were issued in respect of foreign-going ships. To reduce as far as possible any duplication, my Department will accept work undertaken by a classification society up to 50 per cent. of all running surveys on class I passenger ships. In addition, other measures have recently been agreed with the industry to cut costs as I stated in reply to a question tabled by my hon. Friend on 24 November 1986. In assessing the scope for further delegation I must take into account, in the public interest, the safety of the many who travel on passenger ships.

Ships (Investors)

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the net present value per £100 of investment of the tax allowances granted to investors in ships in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on the tax allowances, including accelerated depreciation, investment grants and interest-free loans available in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The net present value to companies of tax relief on annual writing down allowances at the rate of 25 per cent. of the reducing balance per £100 of the cost of a ship, will be about £28 if there are profits sufficient to absorb the full amount of the allowances. Additionally, this year the business expansion scheme was extended to companies engaged in ship chartering. The value of the income tax relief will depend upon the tax position of the investor but might typically be about £50 for every £100 invested.

With regard to tax allowances in the Federal Republic of Germany, I cannot add to the information given to my hon. Friend in my reply of 26 November 1986, at column 276.

Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950

Mrs. Golding asked the Secretary of State for Transport, what progress has been made towards the implementation of the report of the review chaired by Professor Michael Home of the Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I announced the Government's response, accepting the great majority of the report's recommendations, on 24 July at columns. 455-56. We plan to introduce amending legislation at a suitable opportunity. I hope soon to announce appointments to the proposed streetworks advisory committee. Good progress is also being made on other measures to follow up the report.

Joint working parties between utilities and highway authorities have been established to draw up the new specifications that will be needed to reinstatements, to prepare a system for the training and certification of workmen and to develop the computerised streetworks register. In addition the local authorities have agreed to enter into discussions with the utilities on the arrangements for diversionary works. I will consider in the light of these discussions whether to bring forward proposals for a cost-sharing solution.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in order to ensure a freer flow of traffic on the Severn bridge, he will make it his policy to forgo the collection of tolls.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Toll collection at estuarial crossings does not by itself restrict the flow of traffic, provided the number of toll booths is adequate.

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate the causes of recent delays and hold-ups on the Severn bridge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Delays to traffic using the Severn crossing and their causes are monitored continuously. The following table summarises the position for the three-month period ending 8 December.

Cause	Numer of occasions
Vehicle breakdown	55
Vehicle accident	16
High winds	7
Maintenance work	2

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the tolls on the Severn bridge following the decision of the House of Lords.

Mr. Moore: The Appeals Committee of the House of Lords has refused leave to Gwent county council and other local authorities to appeal to the House of Lords against the decision given by the Court of Appeal on 31 October concerning the Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1985. The Appeals Committee's decision removes any doubt about the vires of that order. The higher tolls it prescribes will be reintroduced on Sunday 4 January.

Shipping Investment (West Germany)

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information is available to his Department about aids made available to shipowners by the Länder Governments in West Germany in addition to those aids to shipping investment available to German shipowners listed in the answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 276.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Motorways

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total mileage of motorways in England (a) in use, (b) under construction and (c) planned at 1 April.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The total mileage of motorways in England at 1 April 1986 was as follows:

	Miles
(a) In use	1,556
(b) Under construction	30
(c) Planned	98

M25 (Traffic Studies)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport which sections of the M25 are currently the subject of traffic monitoring studies; and by whom the studies are being carried out.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department monitors traffic on the M25. Automatic counting loops are being installed on all sections of the motorway. Further specific studies will be undertaken as necessary.

West Yorkshire Passenger Transport Authority

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Transport when we will announce his Department's decision on the West Yorkshire passenger transport authority and executive's application for redetermination of its 1987-88 expenditure level.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on Tuesday 16 December.

Warminster Bypass

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce the date for the start of the Warminister bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Tenders have been received and are currently being appraised. Works may start around the end of January.

Buses (West Sussex)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of bus deregulation in West Sussex.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am pleased that there has in general been a smooth transition to deregulation in West Sussex. The county council has worked hard to ensure that the previous service levels were broadly maintained, and at the same time has been able to achieve subsidy savings of over £1 million under the new arrangements for competitive tendering. I understand that the council is already acting to ensure that service levels continue to be maintained after full deregulation on 26 January 1987.

Driving Tests

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average waiting time for a driving test in Portsmouth, Fareham and Southampton.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The current waiting times are:

	Weeks
Portsmouth	20
Gosport (Fareham)	19
Southampton	15

The target is 11 weeks.

The Minches

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the possible designation of the Minches as an area of water to be avoided by oil tankers; and what reply he has sent.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has received a letter on this matter from Friends of the Earth, Scotland, and a reply was sent on his behalf on 15 December.

In commenting on the Friends of the Earth's suggestion of an area to be avoided, the reply said:

"In considering the problems regarding tanker traffic in the Minches Ministers have been anxious to make a positive contribution to safety, as opposed simply to shifting the casualty risk from one place to another. Your paper rightly makes the point that an oil spill to the west of the Hebrides would still be likely to cause widespread pollution of the Scottish Islands and the mainland coast, and it was precisely because of this that Ministers were reluctant to promote a measure which might deny smaller vessels the option of using the shelter of the Minches during rough weather. In submitting proposals for a deep water route to IMO, a specific recommendation has been made that it should be used, weather conditions permitting, by laden tankers over 10,000 grt. You will note that this will tend to separate northbound and southbound vessels in exactly the same way as would your proposal. There is however the additional advantage that vessels over 10,000 grt are required to carry two radars, which introduces a redundancy factor in the navigational aids of such vessels and hence reduces their risk of stranding or collision.

Having carefully considered all the options the Secretary of State believes that the choice of a deep water route is the right one".

Drink-Drive Campaign

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has given chief constables about Her Majesty's Government's drink-drive campaign this Christmas.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Association of Chief Police Officers was consulted about the theme of the campaign and participated in its launch. We have taken its advice and are grateful for its help at the launch of the campaign.

London Road Assessment Studies

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many meetings between his Department and the consultants there have been to discuss the London road assessment studies since they were first received;

(2) when each of the four consultants' reports on the London road assessment studies were received by his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Three of the reports published on 12 December were received on 31 October and the fourth on 7 November. There have been frequent discussions with the consultants about arrangements for printing, publication and distribution.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will detail the costs incurred by his Department in the preparation of the four London road assessment studies;

(2) what was the total cost for consultants involved in producing the London road assessment studies.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The cost of managing these commissions is not readily distinguishable from other work carried out in respect of the Department's road and traffic responsibilities for London. Consultancy costs were given in an answer to the hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 10 December, at column 154.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) new and (b) second-hand double-deck buses were either bought or leased by London Regional Transport or its subsidiaries in (i) 1985-86 and (ii) 1986-87; and how many are proposed to be either bought or leased in 1987-88.

Mr. David Mitchell: Decisions on bus procurement are a matter for London Regional Transport and its subsidiary London Buses Ltd. I understand that London Buses Ltd. purchased 266 new double-deck buses in 1985-86 and expects to have purchased a further 209 new double-deck buses by the end of 1986-87.

The requirement for 1987-88 is a matter for the judgment of LRT, in the light of anticipated demand and the condition of its existing vehicles.

MV Kowloon Bridge

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his statement of Friday 12 December, Official Report, columns 699-702, when he expects to be in a position to announce a starting date for the inquiry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Arrangements for the public formal investigation are being made. The starting date will depend on a number of factors such as the selection and appointment by the Lord Chancellor of a senior member of the Admiralty Bar as Wreck Commissioner, the time required for the detailed case to be prepared and the need for the parties to have time to prepare their cases.

Traffic Order Schemes

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the average incidence of delay for traffic order schemes planned by the former metropolitan county councils and passed on to city councils on abolition.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not available centrally.

CIVIL SERVICE

Former Crown Servants (Business Appointments)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Minister for the Civil Service whether he will publish a report on business appointments of former Crown servants.

Mr. Luce: I have today placed copies of a statistical report entitled "Acceptance of Outside Appointments by Crown Servants" in the Libraries of Parliament.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Recorders

Mr. Alton asked the Attorney-General whether there is a compulsory retirement age for recorders.

The Attorney-General: Under section 21(5) of the Courts Act 1971, neither the initial term for which a recorder is appointed, nor any extension of that term, can continue his appointment after the end of the completed year of service in which he reaches the age of 72.

Mr. Alton asked the Attorney-General how many recorders over the age of 70 years continue to sit.

The Attorney-General: According to such information as is available, there are nine serving recorders who have reached the age of 70.

Mr. Alton asked the Attorney-General how long it takes the Lord Chancellor's Department to process appointments to recorderships; and whether any appointments have been outstanding for six months.

The Attorney-General: The question is misconceived in terms of the modern system of judicial appointments. The hon. Member is referred to the booklet "Judicial Appointments", published by the Lord Chancellor's Department in May 1986, which sets out the Lord Chancellor's policies and procedures in relation to the appointment of recorders, among other judicial officers. The Lord Chancellor is sending the hon. Member a copy of this booklet. There is and can be no fixed timetable. Recorders are appointed from among those who have sat as assistant recorders and no application is necessary. Assistant recorders automatically begin to be considered for promotion to full recordership when they have gained a sufficient experience of sitting, which is normally between three and five years. If they are not promoted to a full recordership within a reasonable time thereafter, their assistant recordership is usually terminated.

Sir Arthur Franks

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Attorney-General when he hopes to complete his consideration with the Director of Public Prosecutions of allegations against Sir Arthur Franks.

The Attorney-General: There has been a careful investigation in this case. The Director of Public Prosecutions and I are satisfied that there is no evidence whatsoever to substantiate any of the allegations made.

State Security

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Attorney-General when, pursuant to his answer of 28 November, Official Report, column 393, he hopes consideration will be completed or whether steps are to be taken against Sir Dick White and others in respect of information which they are alleged to have given to the authors of the book "Conspiracy of Silence".

The Attorney-General: Consideration of the matter is complete. As I said in the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 20 November, at columns 264-65, former and present servants of the Crown are well aware that they may not make unauthorised disclosure of information acquired in their work. Formal letters underlining the duty of confidentiality have been sent to a number of former officials whom Mr. Penrose and Mr. Freeman purport to quote in their book "Conspiracy of Silence". I do not propose to identify the individuals concerned.

Judges (Drink-Driving Offences)

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Attorney-General if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the names of judges and former judges who have been convicted of a drunken driving offence in the last two years, indicating the sentence in each case.

The Attorney-General: The table gives the names of full-time judges in England and Wales who have been convicted of an offence of driving with an alcohol concentration above the prescribed limit since 1 November 1984, and the sentence imposed in each case in relation to that offence.

Judge Bolland—Fined £200, disqualified 18 months, pay £10 costs.

Judge Morrison—Fined £150, disqualified 12 months.

Judge D. B. Williams QC—Fined £150, disqualified 2 years, pay £50 costs.

Records are not kept about judges who have retired from full-time service.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Rolls-Royce plc

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement about the privatisation of Rolls-Royce plc.

Mr. Channon: Subject to market conditions, the Government intend to return Rolls-Royce to the private sector in April or May 1987.

The Government will retain a special share in the company, which will enable them to ensure that Rolls-Royce remains under United Kingdom control. Under the articles of association the proportion of foreign-held shares in the company will be limited to 15 per cent., and these provisions will be protected by the special share. In addition, disposals of more than 25 per cent. of the company's assets, or of significant assets used for nuclear business, will be subject to the special shareholder's consent. It will also be a requirement that the chairman, managing director and at least 75 per cent. of the board shall be United Kingdom citizens. Finally, individual shareholdings will be limited to 15 per cent. The limit on individual shareholdings will also be protected by the special share, but will lapse on 1 January 1989.

The Government have also reached a decision on the appropriate capital structure for Rolls-Royce following privatisation. At present, the company operates with the backing of assurances first given by my hon. Friend the Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) on 22 February 1973, and confirmed by successive Governments, that the Government would ensure that the debts of the company would be met in the extremely unlikely event of a liquidation. As previously announced to the House, it is the Government's view that following privatisation the company should have a capital structure such as to enable it to operate without the need for such Government assurances.

The Government have decided accordingly that, as part of the arrangements for and at the time of the proposed offer for sale, they will subscribe an amount of new ordinary shares which, after deducting such expenses of the offer as are payable by Rolls-Royce, will give net proceeds to the company equal to the net borrowings of the company and its subsidiaries (including obligations under finance leases) as recorded in the consolidated audited balance sheet as at 31 December 1986. These new ordinary shares (which will be subscribed conditional on the offer for sale being completed) will form part of the shares made available under the offer for sale.

From the time of the completion of the offer for sale the previous Government assurances referred to above will cease to have effect.

The Government have informed Rolls-Royce of their decision on these matters and the company has welcomed the Government's commitment as a sound base for its future operations.

Film Industry

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make an estimate of foreign investment in the British film industry for the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: The available information relates to inward direct investment in the United Kingdom film industry. It was £4·6 million in 1984, the latest year for which the data are available.

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the foreign earnings of the British film industry for the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: The latest available information relates to 1985 and was published in British Business, 19 September 1986, page 41.

Vauxhall Cars

Mr. Woodcock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the level of United Kingdom content in Vauxhall cars which are assembled in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Although Vauxhall has undertaken a significant amount of component resourcing into the United Kingdom, it has been affected by exchange rate movements and now expects to achieve only a 50 per cent. level of United Kingdom content in its cars and car-derived vans by the second quarter of next year. We shall be pressing hard for an improvement in this situation.

General Motors

Mr. Woodcock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any information on the net effect on the United Kingdom balance of payments of combined operations of General Motors in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not available from the trade statistics. Such detailed information as we have is provided to us by the company on a commercially confidential basis. In general there is an inbalance between GM's export and import performance, but we are maintaining regular contact with the task force set up by General Motors in 1985 to identify steps which can be taken to reduce this inbalance.

Greek Cement

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the volume of imports of Greek cement for each of the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of discussions within the European Commission and the Council on the future of Greek subsidies.

Mr. Alan Clark: 18,025 tonnes of White Portland cement were imported from Greece in August 1986. There are no indications that much of this has yet found its way on to the market. There have been no other imports of cement from Greece in the last 12 months. on the future of the Greek subsidies, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 10 December, at column 175.

Radio Regulatory Division (Annual Report)

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the first annual report of radio regulatory division, as recommended by the Merriman committee, will be published.

Mr. Pattie: I am pleased to say that the first report was published today and that copies have been placed in both Libraries.

Vosper Shiprepairers

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what were the conditions of sale for the management buy-out of Vosper Shiprepairers of Southampton;

(2) what was the total price paid to Government in the management buy-out for Vosper Shiprepairers of Southampton.

Mr. Giles Shaw: These matters are commercial in confidence between British Shipbuilders and the purchasers of Vosper Shiprepairers Limited.

Research and Development

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will identify the various programmes promoted by his Department within the United Kingdom and through collaborative ventures within the European Economic Community to promote research, development and production; when these programmes were inaugurated; and what are the financial resources devoted to each of them.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Lloyd's (Neil Inquiry)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has now received the report of the Neil inquiry into Lloyd's; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No, but I understand that the committee of inquiry into regulatory arrangements at Lloyd's hopes to be able to submit its report to my right hon. Friend shortly.

Japan

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what has been the volume of United Kingdom exports to Japan each year since 1975 to date expressed in cash terms, real terms on 1975 and as an annual percentage increase or decrease on the previous year and on 1975;

(2) what has been the volume of Japanese imports into the United Kingdom each year since 1975 expressed in cash terms, real terms on 1975 and as an annual percentage increase or decrease on the previous year and on 1975.

Mr. Alan Clark: Estimates of trade statistics expressed in real terms are not available. Trade with Japan from 1975 is as follows:

United Kingdom trade with Japan

Year	£ millions	Percentage increase (decrease) on previous year	Percentage increase on 1975

British Steel Corporation

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is in a position to announce a revised external financing limit for the British Steel Corporation.

Mr. Giles Shaw: BSC's external financing limit was reduced from £146 million to £51 million in July. BSC's performance in the first half of the year has been good, despite the uncertainty affecting some markets, including those elsewhere in Europe. I am glad to say that the corporation's latest forecasts for the rest of the current financial year indicate that a further reduction of £25 million in the EFL, from £51 million to £26 million, is practicable, and this change has now been made.

Financial Services

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will bring into force section 105 of the Financial Services Act; and how he proposes to use its powers.

Mr. Howard: Section 105, which enables the Secretary of State to investigate investment businesses, comes into force today.

Subsection (2) makes special provision for members of recognised self-regulating organisations and professional bodies. It is not yet possible for an organisation or body to apply for recognition. In the meantime, the Secretary of State will consult an organisation or body which he believes is likely to receive recognition, before deciding whether to use the section 105 powers to investigate any part of its member's affairs regulated by that organisation or body.

Rover Group

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recommendation he has received from the Rover Group board concerning its information technology subsidiary, ISTEL; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend has accepted the board's recommendation that Rover Group should proceed to detailed negotiations with the management buy-out as the preferred route for selling a majority stake in ISTEL.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Plutonium

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify the details of the standard format introduced for plutonium trade within the European Communities.

Mr. Eggar: Details of the standard format used for plutonium transfers within the European Communities are set out in a ministerial declaration of common policy on the consequences of the adoption of the NSG guidelines by the ten member states of the Community dated 20 November 1984. A copy of this is in the Library.

Syria

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make an estimate of the costs incurred by British industry arising from the severing of diplomatic links with Syria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No. It is not possible to quantify what, if any, costs to British industry can be directly attributed to the break in relations.

Corporal Punishment

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to secure the publication of the report of the European Commission on human rights which is going to the Committee of Ministers into complaints brought against the British Government on corporal punishment in schools by Ms. Karen Warwick and her mother, constituents of the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch.

Mr. Eggar: The Commission's report is confidential. It is for the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe to decide whether the report should be published. It is not our practice to disclose how we intend to vote on issues considered by the Committee of Ministers.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Cash asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the review of contingency plans following the Chernobyl accident.

The Prime Minister: The first stage of a thorough review of existing emergency plans and procedures in the light of experience of the Chernobyl accident has now been completed by the Cabinet Office in consultation with the appropriate Government Departments and agencies concerned.

The existing plans are addressed specifically to an accident occurring within the United Kingdom and cover both the emergency procedures at the site and offsite arrangements to protect the public. They continue to provide a valid basis for the response to any nuclear accident in the United Kingdom. However, the Government have decided that planning needs to provide more specifically for the response to a nuclear accident outside the United Kingdom.

Detailed planning is now in hand. Among other things this will need to ensure nationwide monitoring coverage and, in the light of expert assessment of the results of monitoring, for the dissemination of appropriate advice and information to the general public. In the event of any future nuclear accident overseas affecting the United Kingdom the Secretary of State for the Environment will take the lead in co-ordinating Government action.

At the same time, the Government will continue to work with our international partners both in the International Atomic Energy Agency and elsewhere to improve the arrangements for co-ordinated international action. In the meantime, the two recently signed International Atomic Energy Agency sponsored conventions should ensure earlier and more effective notification and dissemination of information than occurred in the case of the Chernobyl accident.

I shall make a further statement when the detailed planning now in hand has been completed and appropriate steps will be taken to make the new arrangements known to the public and to all the authorities concerned.

Lord Rothschild

Q77. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister whether she will now release Lord Rothschild from his obligations of confidentiality as a former member of the security services; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: All present and former members of the security services owe a life-long duty of confidentiality to the Crown. They may not make unauthorised disclosures of information acquired in their work. Any requests for authorised disclosure would be considered in the normal way.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Pavitt asked the Prime Minister if Sir James Cleminson has yet presided over meetings of the review body for nurses and midwives remuneration; how many meetings have been held in connection with the 1987 award; when she is hoping to receive the report; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I understand that Sir James Cleminson chaired his first meeting of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine earlier this month and that this was the review body's third meeting since completing its 1986 reports. I have as yet received no indication of when the review body's next report will be submitted. We look forward to receiving the recommendations of the review body in due course.

Civil Servants (West Germany)

Mr. Steel asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the level of take-home pay received by British civil servants working in West Germany relative to their British based counterparts.

The Prime Minister: British civil servants serving in West Germany receive a supplement to salary known as foreign service allowance. This compensates for the extra cost of having to live outside the United Kingdom in order to perform their duties. The allowance is adjusted to reflect movements in local prices or exchange rates to ensure that the purchasing power of take-home pay and the allowance can maintain a standard of living which is at least equivalent to that of civil servants in the United Kingdom.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what action was taken in connection with the report by the then Secretary of State for Defence alleging that the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry had urged the managing director of the leading company in the European Westland consortium to withdraw in the national interest, during the period between the receipt by the private office of that report on 8 January and the discussion of Westland plc by the Cabinet on 9 January.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November, at columns 49-50.

Police and Military Establishments

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister how many police and military establishments she has visited since 1979.

The Prime Minister: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

International Development Association

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the negotiations for the eighth replenishment of the International Development Association; and what the United Kingdom will contribute as a result.

Mr. Chris Patten: Negotiations ended successfully in Rome on 15 December. The total replenishment for commitment over the three years from 1 July 1987, including a negotiated element of $11·5 billion and voluntary additional contributions, will be nearly $12·4 billion. This is a much better result than had earlier been expected. In addition the IDA should be able to lend a substantial further amount on the basis of the repayments it expects to receive over the next few years.

Forty-five to 50 per cent. of all IDA lending will go to sub-Saharan Africa, and up to 30 per cent. to India and China; $3 billion to $3·5 billion will be available to support economic adjustment.

I am glad to say that the United Kingdom offered a voluntary additional contribution of $15 million (about £10 million) on top of our 6·7 per cent. share of the negotiated replenishment, to help achieve this result. Our total contribution, subject to Parliament's approval, will be nearly £525 million.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Mrs. Catherine MacInnes

Mr. Craigen asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland when he hopes to reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill's letter of 15 November 1986 regarding matters raised by his constituent Mrs. Catherine MacInnes.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: I wrote to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mr. Craigen) on 16 December 1986 in reply to his letter of 15 November 1986.

WALES

A55

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were the traffic considerations that determined that the A55 dual carriageway Bangor bypass should continue into the A5 as a dual-carriageway around the Llanfairpwll bypass rather than continuing to Caernarfon.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The generation of traffic over the reconstructed Britannia bridge resulted in estimated design year traffic flows at Llanfairpwll bypass which justified the provision of a dual carriageway.

Improvement of the A487 trunk road between Bangor and Caernarfon is included in the programme of trunk road improvement schemes as set out in "Roads in Wales 1985". The standard of road to be provided will be determined following detailed consideration of all relevant factors including traffic need, cost and environmental implications.

Cardiac Surgery Unit, Cardiff

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales, further to the answer of 5 December to the hon. Member for Carmarthen, Official Report, column 803, if he will detail the timetable for the establishment of a cardiac surgery unit at Cardiff.

Mr. Mark Robinson: There is already a cardiac surgery unit at Cardiff, which in 1985 performed 605 operations. We intend to expand this unit but the timetable depends on a current strategic review of services, which is nearing completion.

Motorways

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the mileage of trunk motorways in Wales in use, under construction and planned as at 1 April.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: At 1 April 1986, 1,102 miles of motorway and trunk roads were in use, 26 miles under construction and 100 miles of improvement planned.

Planning Appeals

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the planning appeals decided by him since May 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Wales Tourist Board

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will indicate the level of resources he will make available to the Wales Tourist Board for 1987-88.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I hope to make about £8·5 million available to the Wales Tourist Board in 1987-88 subject to the usual scrutiny of the Supply Estimates when they are presented to Parliament, probably in March.

Housing

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy towards the role of local housing authorities in providing new accommodation for categories other than special needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I shall continue to encourage local authorities to put their main effort into the repair and renovation of the existing housing stock. Outside the private sector, we are looking to the housing association movement to provide the bulk of new build or renovated rented housing required, using private finance wherever possible, thus seeking to achieve greater diversity of provision than exists today. Local authorities remain free to undertake new build within the resources available in accordance with their own assessment of local needs and priorities.

ENERGY

Plutonium

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to answer questions on the value of contracts with foreign countries for the reprocessing of plutonium.

Mr. Goodlad: No. This information is commercially confidential between BNFL and its customers.

Severn Barrage

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list the long-term studies being undertaken by, or on behalf of, his Department into tidal power;

(2) if, in the light of the recommendations of the Severn barrage committee in 1982 that designs and economic studies into a Severn barrage should proceed in parallel with the investigation of environmental issues, he will ask the Severn Tidal Power Group to produce such studies; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what steps will be taken to ensure that the Severn Estuary studies in relation to the proposed tidal barrage adequately cover the complete winter season of wading birds; if, in the light of the fact that work on the studies has not yet begun, he still expects them to be completed within two years from July 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Secretary of State announced in July a £5·5 million extension to the investigation into the United Kingdom's tidal resources. This work includes advanced investigations into a Severn barrage on a line near to Cardiff and Weston; a contribution towards studies into a Mersey barrage; and generic studies including construction techniques, environmental impact, and the potential of smaller sites around the United Kingdom.

The report on the Severn barrage by the Severn Tidal Power Group published in July discussed environmental issues and recommended that further study was necessary. The work programme for the Severn Estuary studies and other related work of a generic nature not necessarily restricted to the time scale of the study carried out by the Severn Tidal Power Group will include an examination of the impact of a tidal barrage on wildlife. Details of the Severn work programme, related studies, and procedure for consultation are still being discussed by the Central Electricity Generating Board, the Severn Tidal Power Group, and my Department. It is intended that full details of the studies and consultation procedures will be widely circulated for comment initially and that there should be an ongoing consultation process with all interested parties.

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of the country's present energy needs would be provided by the proposed Severn barrage; and what is the expected annual increase in energy demand over the period of construction of the barrage.

Mr. David Hunt: If a Severn tidal barrage were to be built near to Cardiff and Weston, it would provide about 5 per cent. of Britain's current electricity demand, about 2 per cent. of the current simultaneous maximum electricity load at the time of winter peak, or about 1 per cent. of current United Kingdom final energy demand. The sales forecast adopted by the Electricity Council, October 1986, implies an annual increase of 1·6 per cent. per annum to the middle of the next decade.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will take steps to suspend fact-finding visiting by the general public to the British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. Sellafield site until all of the safety requirements stipulated by the nuclear installations inspectorate's special safety audit are fully implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Arrangements for visits to the Sellafield site are the responsibility of BNFL.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the specific access permitted to the nuclear installations inspectorate safety audit team to full records of (a) spent Magnox fuel received and (b) plutonium reprocessed each week at Sellafield from 1 June.

Mr. Goodlad: Nuclear installations inspectorate may have access to any information relevant to nuclear safety.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) which particular safety modifications of the Sellafield site, since included in the list of changes stipulated by the nuclear installations inspectorate's safety audit, have been undertaken and made known to his Department by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. since March;

(2) whether British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. had, prior to March, conveyed details to his Department of the safety problems identified by the nuclear installations inspectorate in its safety audit.

Mr. Goodlad: Responsibility for safety at nuclear sites, under both the Health and Safety at Work Act etc. 1974 and the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 falls on the operator. Compliance with the legislation is overseen by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive. The safety audit of Sellafield was established by the Health and Safety Executive at the end of February 1986. My Department has received a copy of the report.

I am advised that a number of specific requirements for the improvement of plant highlighted by the nuclear installations inspectorate team and listed in the report were undertaken during the course of the audit and are now either completed or in the course of completion by British Nuclear Fuels.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will make available finance to British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. to support the implementation of the safety changes stipulated in the nuclear installations inspectorate's safety audit report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Financing the implementations of the recommendations of the nuclear installations inspectorate report is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown), Official Report, column 112, of 9 December, if he will make it his policy to publish safeguards agreements covering civil nuclear materials at Sellafield.

Mr. Goodlad: I have nothing to add to my earlier reply.

Gas and Electricity Disconnections

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the number of domestic gas and electricity consumers who have had their supply disconnected for each of the last three years.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: This is a matter for the industries themselves. I have asked the chairmen of British Gas and the Electricity Council to provide the information direct to the hon. Member.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what communications and consultations he expects to have with (a) Euratom, (b) the International Atomic Energy Agency and (c) DECD Nuclear Energy Agency on the implications of the nuclear installations inspectorate's safety audit of Sellafield.

Mr. Goodlad: Safety of nuclear installations is a matter for national authorities.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to meet trades union officials at the Sellafield plant to discuss improvements in safety and operational practice resulting from the recommendations of the nuclear installations inspectorate safety audit of the Sellafield nuclear plant.

Mr. Goodlad: This is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc.

CEGB (Financial Control Systems)

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Rother Valley on 4 December, Official Report, column 740, whether the exercises observed by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate at each named power station included full exercises performed by all shifts and teams at the station; what proportion of duly authorised persons was observed in the performance of full exercises; what proportion of other personnel was observed in the performance of full exercises; whether the content and duration of exercises observed varied between shifts and teams; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: [pursuant to his reply, 16 December 1986, c. 477]: The timing and exercising of those staff with direct responsibilities for dealing with an emergency is carried out routinely at power stations, and there is a statutory requirement for emergency arrangements to be fully rehearsed regularly. In practice this means at least once a year at each location. A different shift is chosen each time for these exercises which are witnessed by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate. For operational reasons, it is only possible for a proportion of the staff on any shift to participate in an exercise.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Firearms Licences

Mr. Budgen asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new firearms licences for sporting guns were issued in Northern Ireland in 1984, 1985 and to date in 1986; and how many of these were issued to members of gun clubs.

Mr. Scott: In Northern Ireland, a person may hold several firearms for different purposes by the authority of one firearm certificate. The information requested is therefore being given as the number of firearms held in Northern Ireland for sporting purposes and not the number of certificates issued. At 31 December 1984, 96,404 firearms were held in Northern Ireland for sporting purposes by authority of firearm certificates granted or renewed by the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. At 31 December 1985 the number was 98,359 and at 30 November 1986 the number was 99,928.

Information regarding the numbers of firearm certificates and the number of firearms held by virtue of those certificates on issue to members of firearms clubs authorised under the provisions of article 54 of the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to visit the Republic of Ireland to discuss the Anglo-Irish Agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I have no plans at present to visit the Republic of Ireland. The Anglo-Irish Agreement continues to offer a good framework for making progress on Northern Ireland's problems, and much work has already been done.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate the numbers unemployed in each electoral ward, each local government district and each parliametary constituency in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: There are 526 electoral wards in Northern Ireland and the information in the form requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. The numbers of unemployed claimants in each local government district and parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland at 13 November 1986 are as follows:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Trent Grain Ltd.

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has regarding the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce's investigations into the grain holding of Trent Grain Ltd.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Potatoes

Mr. Gale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place copies of submissions made by the Federation of Agricultural Co-operatives (UK) Ltd. and the Processed Vegetable Growers Association to the Potato Review Group in the Library.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if further to his reply of 5 December, Official Report, column 848, to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Dr. Thomas) about radioactivity in sheep, he will state the precise location of the readings of radioactive caesium listed in Cumbria.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Rhizomania

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the extent of the disease rhizomania in Cambridgeshire; what he estimates its effects will be on sugar beet growing land; what steps are being taken by his Department to eradicate the disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There have been no outbreaks of rhizomania in the United Kingdom; the disease causes serious loss of yield and reduction of sugar content in sugar beet. I itemised the steps being taken by my Department to guard against rhizomania in the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Freud) on 1 December at columns 475-476 and I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made then.

Milk Production

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if the provisional European Economic Community agreement on milk production reached on 16 December places any additional financial responsibility directly on member states; and who will be responsible for the payment of subsidies (i) to buy out milk quotas and (ii) to dispose of existing butter surpluses;

(2) what surplus production of milk and milk products has been estimated for the European Economic Community in the current year, 1987, 1988 and 1989, respectively, in the event of implementation of provisional agreement on the milk sector reached on 16 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the designation of environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Jopling: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have today laid before Parliament six orders designating the areas whose selection we announced on 14 August. The areas are West Penwith, the Somerset Levels and Moors, the South Downs, the Norfolk Broads, the Pennine Dales and the Cambrian Mountains. In presenting the orders we have been guided by the formal reports submitted to us by the Countryside Commission and the Nature Conservancy Council. Our Departments have also undertaken extensive consultations with a range of local and national representatives of environmental, farming and other interests. Our objective has been to remain as faithful as possible to the original recommendations while ensuring that the schemes will be sufficiently attractive to generate the high level of uptake on which the achievement of their environmental aims will depend. We shall be encouraging farmers not simply to refrain from damaging operations but to play an active part in conserving landscape, wildlife and historic features. We look forward to inviting applications from farmers in the six areas during the spring.

In each area an ADAS officer has been nominated to co-ordinate the technical aspects of the schemes. These officers are all qualified surveyors and are already in contact with local farming and environmental representatives. They will play a major part in monitoring the progress of the schemes on which I shall produce public reports from time to time.

I am also making available to Parliament maps which show the boundaries of the areas. The rates of payment and management prescriptions are shown in the orders themselves. Farmers who wish to participate in the schemes will be invited to do so for an initial period of five years. I am pleased to announce that the rate of payment will be reviewed in three years' time to take account in particular of economic developments over the period. The rates of payment are as follows:

	per hectare £
The Broads	125 and 200
Pennine Dales	100
Somerset Levels	82 and 120
South Downs	35 and 160
West Penwith	60
Cambrian Mountains	30 and 45

Animal Welfare

Mr. Greenway asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation to lay down humane standards of treatment and care for animals in parks kept by local authorities and to define the circumstances in which such parks may be closed on the grounds of animal welfare; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply. I shall reply as soon as possible.

THE ARTS

Royal Opera House

Mr. Pollock asked the Minister for the Arts what assets purchased from public funds have been made available for the development of the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden.

Mr. Luce: The arrangements have evolved over several years in response to changes in circumstances.

Royal Opera House, Covent Garden Ltd., a body partly financed by the Arts Council of Great Britain out of a grant-in-aid from a Vote of the Office of Arts and Libraries, has completed the first phase of a scheme for the improvement and enlargement of the Royal Opera House in Covent Garden (providing better facilities for artists and staff) and is currently planning a second phase to modernise the building. Government approval to proceed with the second phase has not yet been given, pending discussion of the latest financial projections. The Arts Council made a direct grant of £1 million towards the first phase of the scheme in 1979 but, by agreement between the parties and with the approval of my office, the major contribution from public funds is to come from the proceeds of an eventual sale of all or part of a site adjacent to the Opera House, which the Arts Council acquired several years ago for the purpose of facilitating the development.

This site was bought out of parliamentary funds by the Arts Council in 1975 for £3·1 million in order to provide an extension to the present building. The scope, cost and financing of the scheme being necessarily uncertain at that time, it was not considered appropriate to convey outright title to Royal Opera House, Covent Garden Ltd. There were, however, strong practical reasons for giving it some legal powers over the land, pending final dispositions, and these were provided in 1981 through the creation of a trust, known as the Royal Opera House Development Land Trust, the co-trustees of which are the Arts Council and Royal Opera House, Covent Garden Ltd.

The land trust deed, the terms of which were agreed by my predecessor, set out the rights and interests of the parties, and a framework for action, and its terms were designed to be adaptable to changed conditions as the project developed, and to provide safeguards for the public funds invested.

The land trust deed allowed for the possibility that part of the land should be used for the purpose of extending and improving the opera house and part should be commercially developed. Expenses incurred by Royal Opera House, Covent Garden Ltd. in connection with the land commercially developed would be a first charge on the proceeds of the sale of that land, but any excess of those proceeds over such costs would be paid to the Arts Council; expenditure on the improvements of the opera house itself would be borne by Royal Opera House, Covent Garden Ltd. alone. If any land was neither developed nor used for the improvement of the opera house, it would return to the sole ownership of the Arts Council. The value of the site was shown at cost price in the accounts of the Arts Council.

In 1985 it was agreed by the Arts Council and Royal Opera House, Covent Garden Ltd. that, in the light of the experience gained in the first part of the scheme, it would be possible to carry out the further improvement of the opera house only by either making a further call on public funds or drawing on the revenues and eventual proceeds of sale of the developed site. The Arts Council therefore sought and received my predecessor's approval to an agreement with Royal Opera House, Covent Garden Ltd., which would give the latter body a first-class claim on those revenues and proceeds of sale.

The relative interests of the two parties to the trust became such that it was no longer appropriate to show the value of the site in the accounts of the Arts Council. The asset has accordingly been written out of the Council's 1985-86 accounts, which now ascribe no value to the council's interest. Correspondingly, the asset has been written into the balance sheet of the trust (under whose aegis the opera house development is nominally being conducted) at the 1975 cost price of £3·1 million, although it is likely to realise considerably more.

Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art

Mr. Moynihan asked the Minister for the Arts whether he is able to announce the publication date of the report of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art for the year ended 30 June.

Mr. Luce: I have today presented the 32nd report of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art for 1985-86. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the achievements of the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Council of Ministers in respect of cultural matters.

Mr. Luce: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Public and Private Bodies (Expenditure)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts what monitoring is undertaken by his Department in respect of the total amount spent on the arts by public and private bodies.

Mr. Luce: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Arts Council (Grant)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts (1) what has been the change in the core grant paid to the Arts Council in each year between 1979-80 and 1987-88 (a) using the average earnings index and (b) using the retail price index;

(2) what are the reasons for using the gross domestic product deflator in calculating the year-on-year grant charge made in respect of the Arts Council grant; and how the gross domestic product deflator is calculated;

(3) what has been the total grant by his Department to the Arts Council between 1979-80 and 1987-88.

Mr. Luce: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Visits

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts which countries he has visited in an official capacity since taking up his position as Minister for the Arts; and which arts institutions he visited in those countries.

Mr. Luce: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Funding

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts (1) if he is prepared to fund the National Theatre, The Royal Opera House, the English National Opera and the Royal Shakespeare Company directly from his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what has been the total amount spent by his Department both directly and indirectly on funding literature in each of the past six years.

Mr. Luce: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Paintings Sale (Levy)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts if he will introduce legislation to require 10 per cent. of the purchase price of all paintings sold at public auction to be used to finance the visual arts through means of a statutory levy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts to what extent his Department is monitoring the effect on the arts of the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan councils.

Mr. Luce: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Sponsorship

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to the amount of arts sponsorship undertaken by business in the United Kingdom for each year since 1982-83: and on what information his statistics are based.

Mr. Luce: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Training Programme

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General what recognised qualification participants in the new job training programme will receive.

Mr. Trippier: Managing agents delivering the new job training scheme pilots are being encouraged to make full use of existing vocational qualifications. The qualifications which participants will receive will vary with the needs and abilities of individuals, and the occupations for which they are being trained.

Print Workers

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General what training courses are organised by his Department for unemployed print workers to train in new technology.

Mr. Trippier: Former employees in the printing industry are eligible with other unemployed people to participate in a wide range of training provision supported by the Manpower Services Commission in skills relevant to new technology.

Particular help is available through the job training programme in London for training in new technology for the printing industry. Discussions are also taking place to determine how some more traditional training provision can be updated to meet current and future skill needs in the industry.

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General how many people, having completed a publicly funded training course, have been found permament work within the print industry in the past three years.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available in the form requested.

For those completing courses funded by the Manpower Services Commission under its job training programme in printing skills in the past three years, well over 50 per cent. confirmed, three months after completing training, that they had gained work using the skills learnt.

Those completing courses under YTS are questioned about the kind of employment they have taken but are not asked to state the industry in which they gained work.

Training Colleges (Entrant Selection)

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General what criteria are laid down by the principals of publicly funded training colleges when selecting entrants.

Mr. Trippier: The question of criteria used by principals of publicly funded colleges when selecting entrants is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science. For adult training provisions financed by the Manpower Services Commission, selection criteria will be largely determined by the demands of the course, and the qualifications, experience and personal qualities necessary to complete it successfully. Consideration will also be given to any specific requirements within the occupations and industry to which the training is directed.

Trainees (Employment)

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General when people have completed a publicly funded training course what restrictions are placed by his Department or the Manpower Services Commission on them finding employment.

Mr. Trippier: None. Quite the opposite; we actively encourage and assist people to find suitable jobs after training.

Power Stations (Asbestos)

Mr. Cox asked the Paymaster General what (a) information and (b) medical tests are available for people working in power stations in the United Kingdom who come into contact with asbestos.

Mr. Trippier: If power station workers are liable to come into contact with asbestos, they should be provided with adequate information on the health risks involved and the precautions they should take. The Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983 require that those who intend to work with asbestos insulating and coating be medically examined before they start work and at two-year intervals while they are engaged on such work.

Pregnancy

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Paymaster General what representations his Department has received on the advisability of women continuing to work in the third trimester of pregnancy.

Mr. Trippier: I am not aware of any representations, but if the hon. Member has any particular points in mind I should be glad to consider them.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Paymaster General what advice is issued to employers and employees on working during pregnancy.

Mr. Trippier: The Health and Safety Executive has issued guidance where there are specific health hazards, such as lead and ionising radiations. At present there is no general guidance on working during pregnancy, but the Executive's employment medical advisory service is available to give advice in individual cases.

Small Businesses

Mr. Ashdown asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to change the collection of data undertaken by his Department so as to increase its value in analysing trends within the small business sector.

Mr. Trippier: The Department recognises the importance of reliable data concerning the small business sector and is continually seeking ways of more effectively exploiting existing sources of information, both official and non-official.

However, further large-scale data-gathering exercises would prove costly and time-consuming, as well as representing an additional burden on those who run small businesses.

Employment, Training and Enterprise Programmes

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently participating in each of the government-funded employment, training and enterprise programmes in the borough of Southwark; and what were the comparable figures for 1979 and 1983.

Mr. Lee: It is not possible to give figures for all schemes for the borough of Southwark because of the various bases on which information is collected. The number of people participating in the following employment and enterprise measures and training in the borough of Southwark on 31 October were:

	Number
Youth Training Scheme	473
Adult Training	429
Young Workers Scheme	11
Job Splitting Scheme	1
Voluntary Projects Programme	54

In addition, in the area covering the boroughs of Greenwich, Lambeth, Lewisham, Southwark, and Wandsworth there are 893 people receiving the enterprise allowance and 3,100 participants on the community programme. There is no community industry office in Southwark. However, in Lewisham, Wandsworth and Lambeth, which attract residents of Southwark, there are 227 participants in community industry. In London and the south-east there were 5,005 people participating in the new workers scheme.

Comparable figures for 1979 and 1983 for all of the measures which were then operating are available only at disproportionate cost.

New Businesses (Southwark)

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Paymaster General (1) what has been the net change in the number of new businesses in the borough of Southwark since (a) 1979 and (b) 1983; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are the latest figures available for the number of new businesses registered in the borough of Southwark since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that the information is not available.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Paymaster General, how many people have received assistance under the enterprise allowance scheme since its inception and (a) how many and (b) what proportion of these were in Wales.

Mr. Trippier: At the end of November 1986, 191,145 people had received assistance under the enterprise allowance scheme since its inception. This included 12,601 people in Wales which is 6·6 per cent. of the total for Great Britain.

BNFL (Safety Audit)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Paymaster General why copies of the Health and Safety Executive's safety audit of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. Sellafield 1986 were not made available for hon. Members in the Vote Office.

Mr. Trippier: It is not customary to make published reports by the Health and Safety Executive available for hon. Members in the Vote Office. However, copies were placed in the House Library on 16 December. I apologise that this was not done earlier.

Claims Adjudication, Birmingham

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Paymaster General (1) how many claims were under consideration at the adjudication office in Birmingham on 30 November; and how many of these claims had been held there for more than a month;

(2) how many claims were under consideration at the adjudication office in Birmingham on 30 November 1979, 30 November 1983 and 30 November 1985.

Mr. Trippier: The number of cases under consideration at the Birmingham adjudicaton office on 30 November 1986 was 6,326, of which 1,514 cases were held there for one month or more.

The number of cases under consideraton at the adjudication office in Birmingham on 30 November 1985 was 4,959, and on 30 November 1983 was 3,303. Figures for November 1979 are no longer available.

YTS

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General how many young people have completed their YTS course within the (a) city of Leicester and (b) East Leicester constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: In the most recent complete year (April 1985 to March 1986) 2,831 young people left YTS in the city of Leicester. Of these, 76 per cent. were in work or further education/training some three months after leaving. The comparable figure for Great Britain as a whole is 67 per cent. These figures are very encouraging and provide clear confirmation that, not only in Leicester but throughout the country, YTS is proving a help to considerable numbers of young people. I am grateful to all those in industry, commerce and elsewhere who provide the opportunities for young people to develop their potential through YTS.

Separate information is not available for the Leicester, East constituency.

Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General what ethnic breakdown he has of YTS premium place participants and of those on employer-led schemes.

Mr. Trippier: The most recently available information on the ethnic group of YTS participants in employer-led schemes who entered under two-year YTS rules relates to trainees in training at 10 November 1986. The data are as follows.

	Number
Ethnic group 1 (White)	265,237
Ethnic group 2 (Black/African/Caribbean descent)	3,736
Ethnic group 3 (Indian Sub-continent descent)	3,443
Ethnic group 4 (None of these)	1,492
Ethnic group 5 (Prefers not to say)	2,651
Total	276,559

Information on the ethnic group of premium place participants is not yet available on a comparable national basis. Premium places are available in both employer-led and non-employer led schemes. Therefore, the figures above include some premium place participants.

North Liverpool Music Resource Centre

Mr. Alton asked the Paymaster General (1) what funding has been made available to date via the Manpower Services Commission by his Department to the north Liverpool music resource centre; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what funding has been made available by his Department for equipment used by the north Liverpool music resource centre; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether schemes which receive European social funding can also qualify for Manpower Services Commission funding;

(4) what information he has as to how many trainees have been given positions with the north Liverpool music resource centre during the past 12 months;

(5) what criteria were used in determining the funding of the north Liverpool music resource centre by the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Lee: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Small Firms (Debts)

Mr. Ottaway asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to the answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 258, on the basis of what research or statistical evidence the Government have reached the conclusion that a statutory right to interest on overdue debts would not necessarily improve small firms' ability to secure payment in time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: On the basis of discussion with individual businesses and small firms representative organisations.

Speech Therapists (Pay)

Mr. Rowe asked the Paymaster General if, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 15, he has yet received the transcript of the judgments referred to; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: We have now received the written reasons for the tribunal's decision. I understand that the applicants are considering the possibility of an appeal.

Training and Employment Schemes (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General if he will list the monthly figures for the Bolton area for those employed on (a) the community programme, the enterprise allowance scheme and the YTS since each scheme began and (b) the youth opportunities programme and community enterprise programme schemes since January 1979.

Mr. Trippier: The available monthly figures for the Bolton area for those employed on the community programme for participants on YTS and for entrants to the enterprise allowance scheme are as follows:

Figures for the community enterprise programme and the youth opportunities programme are not available.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing the numbers and percentages of jobs lost, or gained, in Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom as a whole between June 1979 and June 1986, or the latest month for which figures are available, in (a) all industries (b) all manufacturing industries, (c) all service industries, (d) shipbuilding and repairing (e) metal goods engineering and vehicles, (f) mechanical engineering (g) electrical electronic engineering and instrument engineering, (h) health, education and personal social services, (i) retail distribution (j) banking, insurance and financial.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1986, c, 539-40]: Information about job gains and losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employment at different dates.

Estimates of the numbers of employees in employment in the shipbuilding and repairing industries in Northern Ireland are not available for June 1979 or June 1986. The available information is given in the following table.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Deaths at Sea

7. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation to amend the law relating to inquests on those presumed to have died at sea.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no immediate plans to do so.

Burglaries

15. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the percentage increase in burglaries in England and Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure for the 12 months ended March 1979.

Mr. Mellor: In the 12 months to March 1979, the police recorded 8 per cent. fewer burglaries in England and Wales than in the previous 12 months. In the 12 months to September 1986, recorded burglary increased by 4·7 per cent. However, recorded burglaries fell in 1985 by 3 per cent. Too much weight should not be placed on the figures for any particular 12-month period.

Air Weapons

16. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation to tighten further the restrictions on the sale, possession and ownership of air weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to do so at present. The controls on air weapons in the Firearms Act 1968 are already strict. They have recently been the subject of local publicity campaigns in the west midlands and Greater Manchester police force areas. When we have evaluated these campaigns, we shall consider whether to run similar ones next year in other areas where the incidence of misuse is high.

Victims of Crime

17. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has any proposals to publish more detailed statistics on the age, sex or race of victims of crime.

Mr. Mellor: We already include analysis of the relevant characteristics of victims in appropriate publications and will continue to do so. This year, for example, we have published two reports — the research study "Personal Violence" and Statistical Bulletin 29 of 1986 — giving detailed information on victims of violent crime.

49. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state for each year since 1978 the number of victims of crime recorded by his Department who were (a) children under the age of six years, (b) children aged six to 15 years inclusive.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the ages of victims of crime is not regularly collected centrally except in the case of homicide. Estimates of the numbers of children under 16 who were victims of certain violent and sexual offences recorded by the police in 1984 have been published in table 2 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin issue 29/86. The readily available information on the number of defendants proceeded against for certain sexual offences against children is given in the tables for the years 1979 to 1985. For other types of offence it is not possible, from the results of court proceedings held centrally, to distinguish the age of the victim. The information provided on those offences marked with an asterisk in the tables is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", supplementary tables vols 1 and 4 S1·1 (A) and S4·1 (A-D). Figures for offences of this kind are liable to be affected by variations in reporting and recording of offences and in the practice of bringing prosecutions.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

18. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to state the result of his consideration of representations concerning the conviction of the Maguires for explosives offences.

Mr. Mellor: We are examining the points raised by Mr. Kee, and my right hon. Friend hopes to be able to reach a decision before long.

23. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in his review of the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

26. Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be in a position to make a decision about the case of those imprisoned for the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave today to a question from the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Miss Maynard).

25. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any further representations regarding the six men imprisoned for the Birmingham pub bombings of 1974.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question by the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 20 November at column 288. Since then we have received about 50 letters from members of the public, 20 of which have been forwarded by right hon. and hon. Members. The Irish Minister for Foreign Affairs has written to my right hon. Friend about the case, and officials of the Irish embassy have also raised the matter. We have received petitions bearing a total of 280 signature. In addition, my right hon. Friend and I recently met representatives of the parliamentary Labour party.

47. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Justice Minister of the Government of the Irish Republic concerning the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Mellor: We have received representations from the Government of the Republic on several occasions urging us to review these convictions.

Frontiers (Weapons Control)

19. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has now received from the EEC Commission its draft directive on the abolition of controls on weapons at internal Community frontiers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Drug Control

20. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for extending collaboration on anti-drugs work with other member states of the Council of Europe and the European Community.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: On 20 October I chaired a meeting of EC Ministers which adopted a seven-point plan to step up the fight against the drugs problem. At the ministerial meeting on 9 December we pursued in particular the possibilities of intensified co-operation between European drug liaison officers in Third-world countries. In January, under United Kingdom chairmanship, Ministers of the Council of Europe's Pompidou group will be meeting in London in order to exchange views about current developments in the drugs field and to agree upon a programme of work for the group to pursue in the next two to three years. We shall seek to ensure that the programme is both constructive and realistic and that it serves to improve the already high level of co-operation on drugs matters in western Europe.

BBC

21. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek powers to impose guidelines of conduct on the BBC.

Mr. Mellor: No. It is the responsibility of the board of governors of the BBC to set guidelines for programme makers and to see that they are properly fulfilled in the light of their public service obligations.

Crimes of Violence

22. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state for the most recent 12 months for which figures are available, the percentage increase in crimes of violence against the person since the 12 months ended March 1979.

Mr. Mellor: In the 12 months to September 1986 the incidence of crimes of violence against the person was 42 per cent. higher than in the 12 months to March 1979. Between 1979 and 1985 there was a lower rate of increase than between 1975 and 1979.

Crime Statistics

24. Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the total number of crimes (a) in the 12 months ended March 1979 and (b) in the most recent 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: In the 12 months ending March 1979 police in England and Wales recorded some 2,154,700 notifiable offences, compared with 3,794,400 in the 12 months ending September 1986.

53. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state, in respect of the most recent 12 months for which figures are available, the percentage increase in all crimes since the 12 months ended March 1979.

Mr. Mellor: In the 12 months ending 30 September 1986 the police in England and Wales recorded 51 per cent. more notifiable offences than in the 12 months ending 31 March 1979. Statistics of notifiable offences recorded are published each quarter in a Home Office statistical bulletin (issue number 39/86 being the most recent).

Maxwell Fyfe Directive

27. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to amend the Maxwell Fyfe directive of 1952; and if he will make a statement.

51. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to issue revised guidelines to the security services to replace the Maxwell Fyfe directive of 1952.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Domestic Violence

28. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed with chief officers of police the nature of police response to cases of domestic violence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During the course of this year we have been engaged regularly in discussions with the Association of Chief Police Officers about the police response to the recommendations made by the Women's National Commission in its report on violence against women. This included domestic violence, and guidance was issued to chief officers in Home Office circular 69/1986 on 15 October 1986.

54. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received on the subject of police response to domestic violence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since 15 October, when Home Office circular 69/1985 on violence against women was issued, we have received two letters from hon. Members and one letter from a member of the general public.

Drugs Squad (Merseyside)

29. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Merseyside on the number of drug squad policemen deployed on Merseyside.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable that Merseyside central drugs squad has a complement of 39 officers.

Firearms

31. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals to review legislation on firearms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We keep all matters concerning the possession and use of firearms under constant review but there are no plans at present to amend the Firearms Act 1968.

Fine Defaulters

32. Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fine defaulters were imprisoned in 1985; how this compares with previous years; and what measures he is taking to divert fine defaulters from custody.

Mr. Mellor: The number of persons received into prisons in default of payment of fine is published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales." Table 3 of the latest issue (Cmnd. 9903) for 1985, gives figures for the last 11 years. The number of receptions has been falling and was around 20,500 in 1985.

Courts have a statutory duty to take offenders' means into account when setting the level of a fine and have other powers to prevent default, including power to order payment by instalments, or to make attachment of earnings orders and money payment supervision orders. We are considering whether there are further ways of improving fine enforcement.

Drug Liaison Officers

33. Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the present position in regard to the posting of drug liaison officers overseas.

Mr. Mellor: The Government attach considerable importance to strengthening the network of United Kingdom drug liaison officers overseas. Now that the Indian Government have agreed to the postings of drug liaison officers in Delhi and Bombay, there will shortly be a total of 12 police and customs officers in post in western Europe, the Mediteranean, the Asian sub-continent, South America and the Caribbean.

At their meeting on 20 October EC Ministers invited officials to examine the scope for creating a co-ordinated network of drug liaison officers to monitor developments in producer countries. The work which has already been put in hand was endorsed by their Ministers, meeting on 9 December; a meeting of experts is being held today and work continues under the Belgian Presidency of the Council of Ministers.

Nuclear Accidents

34. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has plans for specific emergency arrangements to deal with consequences for the population at large of accidents involving nuclear facilities or vehicles carrying nuclear materials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Specific emergency arrangements are the responsibility of the operators together with other relevant authorities within the framework of Government guidance.

Prisoners (Statistics)

35. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women are in prison at present.

Mr. Mellor: On Friday 12 December there were 46,443 men and 1,635 women in prison service custody in England and Wales.

Child Abuse

36. Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the action being taken by his Department to prevent child abuse and to improve the likehood of prosecutions where child abuse has taken place.

62. Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives have been taken by his Department to combat child abuse.

Mr. Hurd: A "Stranger Danger" campaign has been in operation for some years. It aims to increase the awareness of children, parents and teachers; to get across an easily understood set of simple rules for children to follow; and to alert parents and teachers to the need to ensure children know and follow these rules. The national standing conference on crime prevention agreed last month to set up a working group to review existing publicity and publications on child molestation and abuse and to make recommendations on the most appropriate messages, presentation and audience for future publicity on this subject. The group has asked to complete its work by next November.

A Home Office-led review is examining the disclosure of criminal backgrounds of those seeking to work with children. As a result new arrangements have been introduced for checks on newly recruited staff and volunteers in the education, social and probation services with substantial access to children, registered child minders and foster and adoptive parents and adults in their households. We are preparing circulars on children in long-term care in the National Health Service and on staff in independent schools. The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (Exceptions) (Amendment) Order 1986 ensures that all those seeking or holding positions which give access to children may be required to declare convictions which are spent under the Act, and may be excluded or dismissed on account of such convictions.

I have requested the Inspectorate of Constabulary to gather information about arrangements which police forces make in child abuse cases. On the basis of this information, and in consultation with chief officers, I will consider the need to issue a circular to the police later next year on the investigation of such offences and the treatment of victims.

The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 made a spouse a competent and compellable witness against a person accused of a sexual offence or an offence of violence against a boy or girl aged under 16. That Act also permits a jury to treat an unjustified refusal to provide an intimate sample as evidence corroborating, for example, the unsworn testimony of a child victim of a sexual assault. We gave full support to the Sexual Offences Act 1985, introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Drake (Miss Fookes), which increased the penalty for indecent assault on a woman or a girl to 10 years. If enacted, clause 21 of the Criminal Justice Bill will permit a child witness in the case of a sexual offence or offence of violence to give evidence before the Crown court via a live video link.

Those sentenced to life imprisonment for the sexual or sadistic murder of children must normally expect to remain in custody for at least 20 years; and those sentenced to more than five years for physical or sexual abuse of children will be granted parole only when release under supervision for a few months before the end of a sentence is likely to reduce the long-term risk of re-offending or in circumstances which are genuinely exceptional.

Neighbourhood Watch Scheme

37. Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the first national conference of neighbourhood watch schemes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The first national neighbourhood watch conference was held by Northumbria police and the Home Office on 8 December. Two hundred and fifty delegates, a mixture of volunteer co-ordinators and police officers from throughout the United Kingdom, met to discuss how the achievements of the neighbourhood watch movement, and the lessons learned from existing schemes, could be used to develop further schemes in communities which would welcome neighbourhood watch, but where no schemes as yet exist.

50. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the present coverage of neighbourhood watch schemes; and what plans he has to encourage their extension.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) today.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many operational neighbourhood watch schemes have been established in the Metropolitan police area in each year since the scheme was introduced; and when the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis will publish details of research analysing the effectiveness of the schemes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner that neighbourhood watch was introduced in the Metropolitan police district in September 1983 and, by the end of 1984, 1,282 schemes had been established. A further 2,488 schemes were established by the end of 1985 and 1,855 more schemes were established up to 31 August 1986. The Home Office has commissioned evaluation research by the Cambridge institute of criminology which will be completed in early 1987. The Commissioner tells me that an evaluation study is being carried out by the Metropolitan police management services department. This study should be completed next spring.

Unsolved Crimes

38. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state for each calendar year since 1978 the total number of crimes which were not cleared up.

Mr. Mellor: Numbers of notifiable offences recorded and cleared up by the police in each of the past 10 years are published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1985" (Cmnd. 10, tables 2.2 and 2.17). Some offences are recorded and cleared up in different years and so it is possible only to estimate the number not cleared up in any year.

Identity Cards

39. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will seek to arrange for standard identity cards for those who call at private houses on behalf of public utilities, Government or councils.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to a reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels) on 17 December.

Violent Offenders

40. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about statutory sentence limits for violent offenders.

Mr. Mellor: We receive many letters from Members of Parliament, the public and interested organisations about sentences for violent offenders. Some of them propose the re-introduction of capital or corporal punishment for particular offences of violence; others propose mandatory sentences. In our view, existing maximum penalties are generally satisfactory.

State Security

41. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make arrangements for the early release of papers relating to the actions of the security service in the mid-1970s.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Drug Control (International Collaboration)

42. Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans for increasing collaboration between European Community countries at posts overseas in combating the drugs trade.

Mr. Mellor: Our posts keep closely in touch with their EC counterparts in the major drug-producing and trafficking countries. Following the recommendation of EC Ministers at their meeting on 20 October, posts in a number of countries have been asked to co-ordinate the preparation of joint assessments of their local drug situation and recommendations for further action by the twelve. As my reply to a question today to my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, East (Mr. Sayeed) indicates, work is well in hand to examine the scope for creating a co-ordinated network of EC drug liaison officers to monitor developments in producer countries.

Emergency Services

43. Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the operation of the London fire and police inquiry telephone service in respect of police and fire services; and if he has been consulted in respect of changes in its operation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I presume that the hon. Member is referring mainly to the 999 system run by the Metropolitan police, and I would refer him to a reply given on 8 December to a question from the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson). No difficulties have been brought to our attention in relation to the London fire service.

Commercial Television

44. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards competition in commercial television.

Mr. Mellor: The Government paved the way for increased competition in commercial television through the new technologies of cable and satellite broadcasting in the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984. The Peacock committee's emphasis on the expansion of consumer choice is one we share, and we support the committee's view that there should be increased competition in the supply of broadcast programmes through substantially greater use of independent productions. We are still considering other proposals which the committee saw as paving the way for the introduction of a competitive broadcasting market, including the possibility of pay television systems.

Crown Immunity

45. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in respect of how many premises under the control of his Department Crown immunity is claimed from prosecution in relation to food hygiene and health and safety legislation.

Mr. Hurd: Three hundred and forty-five.

Crime Prevention

46. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to reduce the incidence of robbery, burglary and theft.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We shall continue to make provision for a strong and efficient police service. We shall also continue the development of a multi-agency approach to crime prevention at national and local level, disseminating good practice to reduce the opportunities available for these crimes to occur.

Private Security Companies

48. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will facilitate the use of the services of private security companies to assist police in the maintenance of law and order.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Private security companies have an important role to play — for example, in protecting private property—but their role is not to patrol streets or other areas of public resort. The maintenance of law or order must remain the task of a properly trained and equipped police force with the support of the public as members, for example, of the special constabulary or of neighbourhood watch schemes.

Stocken Prison

52. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the additional expenditure over the original estimate which has taken place at Her Majesty's prison, Stocken, since its opening.

Mr. Mellor: Following the completion of the main contract for Stocken prison, further expenditure totalling £1,103,000 has been authorised. Of this, £336,000 provides the commissioning fund which is customarily established to meet the various expenses that arise in commissioning a new prison; and £430,000 has been allocated to fit out the workshops to the required specifications within the shell building provided under the main contract. The remaining £337,000 covers additional security fencing which it had similarly been agreed to undertake during the commissioning period; modifications to the gate house to bring the equipment and operating systems up to the department's current requirements, which are aimed at achieving efficiency of operation with maximum economy of staffing levels; and modifications to the sewage pumping station, including the provision of a macerator to deal with the problem of foriegn objects discharged into the sewage system.

Licensing Law Reform

55. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received on reform of the licensing laws in 1986.

Mr. Waddington: Since 1 January 1986, 704 representations have been received in support of relaxation of the present liquor licensing hours and 44 against.

Royal Prerogative of Mercy

56. Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions since 1979 he has recommended the exercise of the Royal prerogative of mercy in respect of persons convicted of criminal offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Following is the information:

Exercise of the Royal Prerogative of Mercy
1 January 1979 to 30 November 1986

Year	Remission of sentence (including fines)	Free Pardon	Total
1979	367	136	503
1980	273	282	555
1981	219	168	387
1982	229	84	313
1983	192	143	335
1984	98	60	158
1985	141	92	233
1986[1]	106	24	130
Total	1,625	989	2,614

[1] To 30 November.

Notes:

1. In most of the cases where the royal prerogative has been exercised, action was taken on grounds other than those affecting the original conviction, for example, a reward for assistance to the authorities, tragic family circumstances, terminal illness of prisoner.
2. The great majority of free pardons granted relate to road traffic convictions in the magistrates' courts.
3. Figures relate to the number of defendants in respect of whom action was taken.

Drinking Age

57. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation to raise the minimum legal drinking age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: We have no plans to do so.

Cruelty to Animals

58. Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to seek to combat the incidence of the maltreatment of animals used as pets.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is already a substantial body of law which provides for the welfare of pet animals. The principal legislation is the Protection of Animals Act 1911 under which it is an offence to cause (or being the owner, permit to be caused) any unnecessary suffering to any domestic or captive animal. We believe that the existing legislation provides an adequate and appropriate remedy for abuse of pet animals, however it may be caused.

Civil Defence

59. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the present arrangements for the provision of civil defence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Civil defence arrangements are kept under constant review.

Prisoners (Protests)

60. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on current contingency plans for dealing with protests which involve the taking of hostages in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Mellor: Contingency plans for dealing with such incidents in prison establishments in England and Wales are currently being reviewed, taking account of the experience of recent incidents.

Peremptory Jury Challenge

61. Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received concerning the inclusion in the Criminal Justice Bill of the abolition of peremptory jury challenges.

Mr. Mellor: Fifty-eight Members of Parliament, interested bodies and members of the public have made their views on the subject known to us during the course of this year.

Radio and Television (Current Affairs Programmes)

63. Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to enshrine in statutory form the ethical guidelines relating to the making of current affairs programmes on television and radio; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do not consider that it would be appropriate or practicable for matters of this kind to be dealt with in legislation.

Offensive Weapons (Children)

64. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to ban the sale of all offensive weapons to children under 18 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West, (Mr. Canavan) today.

Amyl Nitrite

65. Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to end the manufacture and sale of amyl nitrite; and if he will make a statement.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the extent of drug abuse on amyl nitrite, popularly known as "poppers"; and when he intends to bring amyl nitrite within the scope of existing anti-drug regulations.

Mr. Mellor: The alkyl nitrite group of chemicals, which includes amyl nitrite, was considered in 1984 by the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs which concluded that there were insufficient grounds to justify recommending their control under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. We have no plans at present to introduce controls over the sale and manufacture of these substances but continue to monitor the situation in consultation with the Secretaries of State for Social Services and for Trade and Industry. To this end we have recently asked chief constables to include information about "poppers" in their annual reports on drug misuse.

Shops (Violence)

30. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider the establishment of a special departmental study group into ways of combating violence in shops.

Mr. Hogg: Not at present. However, various research projects by the Home Office crime prevention unit have a bearing on the issue of violence in shops. For example, a project carried out for the Home Office by Birmingham university into crime and disorder in shopping centres, including assaults on store staff, has just begun and a report to the Home Office is due next April. A survey of crime and racially-offensive behaviour occurring in over 200 small retail stores in London is currently under way and the report, due by summer 1987, will deal with the incidence of all types of offence, the preventive measures shopkeepers now take and the scope for improving the nature and delivery of preventive advice. From a broader perspective, the work of the crime prevention unit in encouraging stores to tackle shoplifting by prevention has the potential to avoid the violence which can occur when staff attempt to stop suspects (about one in a hundred such arrests lead to violence according to the records of one major retail chain).

Departmental Initiatives (Women)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those initiatives of his Department which have been of benefit to women, since 1979, the cost or estimated cost of those initiatives, and the proportion of the total budget of his Department this represents.

Mr. Waddington: Since 1979, the Home Office has taken or been closely concerned with the following initiatives which have been of particular benefit to women:

(i) Arrangements for the recovery of maintenance payments under parts 1 and 2 of the Maintenance Orders (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act 1972 have been extended to a further four countries and to 13 additional states of the United States of America;

(ii) Section 2 of the British Nationality Act 1981 has given women the same right as men to transmit their British citizenship to their children born abroad. The Act has also enabled women, but not men, to transmit citizenship to illegitimate children;

(iii) The Government gave full support to a Bill (now the Sexual Offences Act 1983), introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Drake (Miss Fookes) which increased the maximum penalties for attempted rape and for indecent assault on a woman or girl and penalised kerb-crawling;

(iv) A ministerial group on women's issues was established in May 1986 under Home Office chairmanship to consider the Government's response to the forward-looking strategies produced by the United Nations conference at the end of the Decade for Women;

(v) A circular was issued to the police on 15 October 1986 urging them to improve the way they assist women who have been the victims of violent attack;

(vi) The Criminal Justice Bill, now before this House, would extend anonymity for rape victims and would empower the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to make an additional payment to a woman who keeps a child conceived as a result of rape;

(vii) The procedures for making appointments to public bodies have recently been reviewed with the object of making information on the appointments and the qualifications required available to women's organisations, and of ensuring that suitable women are included on short lists for appointments;

(viii) Funding has been provided for the standing conference of women's organisations from 1980 to 1986.

It is not possible to calculate the cost or estimated cost of all these initiatives.

London Fire Brigade

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will publish details of the current London fire brigade policy of stand-bys of fire appliances in relation to C25 Dowgate fire station, C26 Barbican, C27 Clerkenwell, C28 Islington, C21 Shoreditch, C22 Kingsland and A23 Euston;

(2) if he will provide details of the types and manufacturers of pump escape appliances, pump appliances, and pump ladder appliances, in use in the London fire brigade since 1 April 1973 and the maximum speeds attainable by each.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate what action his Department intends to take in relation to the principle of round-the-clock equal cover for the London fire service, in the light of the Home Office/Scottish Home and Health Department Green Paper, "Future Fire Policy, A Consultative Document" of 1980 and the Audit Commission Paper, "Value for Money in the Fire Service" of 1 September.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The recommendation on this matter in the Audit Commission occasional paper No. 1, together with the other recommendations in the paper, are being considered by the Department. The local authority associations, as the representatives of the employers, and the fire service trade unions will also be looking closely at the recommendations.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he intends to take steps to ensure the return of the pump appliance, based at C26 Barbican fire station of the London fire brigade until March 1979, to that station, within the 1987-88 London Fire and Civil Defence Authority establishment scheme; and if he will make a statement.

(2) whether he will grant his consent to proposals submitted to him in the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority establishment schemes for the London fire brigade for the loss of the pump appliance from C27 Clerkenwell fire station.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received no proposals from the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority in respect of the establishment scheme for the London fire brigade for 1987-88. Such a scheme has to be submitted by 1 January 1987 and when received it will be carefully considered on its merits.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide details of the establishment of fire appliances and of all ranks of firefighters at the C26 Barbican fire station in the London fire brigade (a) currently and (b) at the date of the opening of the present station; and if he will also indicate the establishment of fire appliances and of all ranks of firefighters, and the addresses of those fire stations closed as a result of C26 Barbican being opened, immediately prior to their closure, indicating also the risk categories of those fire station grounds.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The establishment of fire appliances at C26 Barbican fire station is one pump ladder and one damage control tender. The ranks of firefighters are as follows:

	Number
Assistant Divisional Officer	1
Station Officer	4
Sub Officer	8
Leading fireman	8
Fireman	28
Total	49

The other information requested is not held centrally.

Overseas Police

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from chief constables as to any visits that have taken place so far in 1986 to British police forces by members of overseas police or security forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I see no need to do so. If the hon. Member has a particular visit in mind perhaps he would write to me.

Prisoners (Life Sentences)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women serving life sentences in prisons in the United Kingdom on 30 November.

Mr. Mellor: According to the records held centrally, which are approximate, on 31 October 1986, the latest date for which figures are readily available, about 2,180 males and 70 females in prison department establishments in England and Wales were serving life sentences, including custody for life and detention during Her Majesty's pleasure or for life under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933.

Martial Arts Paraphernalia

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to seek to curb the sale of (a) six-pointed metal stars and (b) other martial arts paraphernalia to those who are not bona-fide enthusiasts.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The possession of an offensive weapon in a public place without reasonable excuse is an offence under the Prevention of Crime Act 1953. We have already taken steps to curb the sale of martial arts weapons to persons with no valid reason to possess them. Earlier this year, in conjunction with the Martial Arts Commission, we issued guidelines to traders urging that such items should not be sold to persons under 18 or to those who cannot produce evidence of membership of a bona fide martial arts club. We look to traders to act responsibly and to pay close attention to the guidelines, copies of which are in the Library.

Prisoners (Smoke-free Environment)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements exist to enable prisoners to live in a smoke-free environment.

Mr. Mellor: It is open to a prisoner who prefers a smoke-free environment and who is not located in a single cell to apply to the governor to be located in one shared with a non-smoker. We would expect governors to treat such applications sympathetically, but the scope for granting such requests will vary from establishment to establishment. The prison department is preparing guidance to governors and medical officers, one purpose of which is to encourage the creation of a smoke-free environment in certain communal areas.

Immigration

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the total level of immigration to the United Kingdom for each of the last 18 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The numbers of persons accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom during each quarter of 1985 and the first three quarters of 1986 were published on 11 December in table 1 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Third Quarter 1986" (Home Office statistical bulletin 38/86).

Detained Children

Mr. Mark Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether young persons sentenced under section 53(2) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 and detained in detention centres or prisons throughout the period of their sentence are entitled to remission.

Mr. Mellor: No. Section 53(2) sentences do not attract remission: those detained under this power are eligible for release on licence under the terms of section 61(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1967 throughout their sentence.

Police Training (Radioactivity)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many days are allocated to the training of police officers above the rank of sergeant in dealing with accidents involving radioactive contamination; and what is the current amount of money allocated to the training of such officers in dealing with such accidents.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 17 December. The information requested is not available centrally.

Medical Campaign Against Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to (a) progress with police inquiries into the break-in in October at the offices of the Medical Campaign Against Nuclear Weapons, at Stamford street, London SE1 and into the theft of confidential documents from those offices and (b) in particular, whether the police have reached any conclusion about any positive political motivation for the break-in; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Police inquiries into this incident are continuing. I am not able to comment on the possible motives for the alleged offence.

Official Information

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a complete list of statutory provisions bearing upon the disclosure of official information, other than the Official Secrets Acts, in order to update the list of provisions published in appendix V of the Franks report.

Mr. Waddington: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Wheel-clamping (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria were used in awarding the tender for the operation of wheel-clamping in the Greater London area to Private Parking Protection.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the two contracts for wheel-clamping in the existing clamping zone were awarded to Bilpot Ltd and Unitrust Protection Services Ltd because their tenders provided the best value for money, taking account of the service to be provided and the cost.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number and names of companies submitting tenders for contracting out of wheel-clamping in the Greater London area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner that tenders were invited and received from eight companies for the contracting out of wheelclamping in the existing clamping zone. These were:

A-Z Couriers
Bilpot Limited
Group 4 Securities
Metropolitan Wheelclamps
Securicor
Securiguard Group PLC
Unitrust Protection Services Limited
Thorn EMI Protech

Community Relations

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many estate-based liaison committees have been established between tenants, police and other social agencies;

(2) how many sector working parties have been established in each London borough;

(3) what is the composition of each consultative committee in the Metropolitan police area; how many times each committee meets; who provides the clerking and research support for each committee; and what is the annual budget for each consultative arrangement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police consultative committees are currently operating within the Metropolitan police area; and in which London boroughs they are established.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that there are 38 formal police community consultative committees operating in the Metropolian police district and another will hold its first meeting in January 1987: 22 of these have been approved by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis under section 106 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act. All London boroughs other than Hackney and Newham have consultative committees and 19 of these have been approved.

Community Radio

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress on the introduction of community radio.

Mr. Mellor: The Green Paper on radio policy, which the Government hope to publish early next year, will consider possible legislative changes permitting the introduction of community radio.

News International, Wapping

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan Police Commissioner as to how many Metropolitan police officers were deployed from the King's Cross road division on 15 December, to attend to duties in connection with the News International plant at Wapping, and as to how many home beat officers were on patrol in the King's Cross road division on that day.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner informs me that on 15 December no officers from the King's Cross road division were deployed on duties connected with the News International dispute at Wapping. Eleven home beat officers were on patrol in the King's Cross road division on that day.

Official Secrets Legislation (Nuclear Power Industry)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the operation of official secrets legislation with respect to the civil nuclear industry.

Mr. Goodlad: I have been asked to reply.

With my encouragement, the civil nuclear industry makes information on its activities widely available to the public. I have no plans to conduct such a review.

SCOTLAND

Labour Statistics

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the numbers of (a) adult males, (b) adult females, (c) young males and (d) young females who are (i) short-term unemployed and (ii) long-term unemployed in the (w) Baillieston, (x) Barrowfield, (y) Dalmarnock and (z) Wester (South) Carntyne areas of Glasgow; and what percentage of the economically active in each category this represents.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The numbers of (i) young males and females under the age of 25 and (ii) adult males and females aged 25 and over who have been unemployed for (a) up to one year and (b) one year and over in each electoral ward in the Glasgow, Shettleston parliamentary constituency on 9 October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, were as shown in the tables. This information is available in the Library. Comparable figures of the economically active are not available.

Torness Nuclear Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the calculated figures for maximum radiation exposure of any member of the public during normal operations of Torness nuclear power station after full commissioning of both reactors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that it estimates that the maximum annual radiation dose to the most exposed member of the public will be 87 microsieverts. The average annual radiation dose received by the public in the United Kingdom from all sources, natural and artificial, exceeds 2,200 microsieverts.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment level has been used in the safety case for Torness nuclear power station in respect of the maximum radiation exposure of any member of the public during normal operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that for design purposes the assessment level of the maximum annual dose to members of the public from Torness nuclear power station is 170 microsieverts.

Local Enterprise Grant

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the bodies assisted during the past two years by the local enterprise grant for urban projects schemes and the amount of LEGUP grant obtained.

Mr. Lang: I have arranged for a list of those projects approved in principle for assistance under the local enterprise grants for urban projects scheme since 1 April 1984 to be placed in the Library. The list excludes cases where an offer of assistance was made but not subsequently taken up by the applicant.

The assistance provided by the Scottish Development Agency under the scheme can take a variety of forms and is not restricted to grant. The list shows the amount of assistance approved. The actual amount of assistance finally provided will depend on the outcome of the individual project.

EEC (Intervention Stores)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the food currently held in EEC intervention food stores in Dundee has been held there (a) for up to six months and (b) for up one year.

Mr. John MacKay: 540 tonnes of butter and 425 tonnes of beef have been in store in Dundee for the last six months. The figures for the last year are 540 tonnes and 415 tonnes respectively.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of area health boards in rank order according to the number of patients awaiting urgent treatment.

Mr. John MacKay: Information is not available centrally which distinguishes between those waiting for urgent and non-urgent treatment.

National Health Service

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of Scottish gross domestic product was spent on the Health Service in (a) 1960 and (b) 1983.

Mr. John MacKay: The first year for which the Central Statistical Office prepared a figure for the Scottish gross domestic product was 1966. For a comparison based on that year, the information requested is as follows:

	1966 £ million	1983 £ million
1. Gross Domestic Product (Scotland) at factor cost	2,803	21,905
2. Expenditure on Health[1]	133·27	1,686·9
3. Proportion 2/1 (percentage)	4·75	7·70

[1] The expenditure figures used may not be strictly comparable because of changes in classification of expenditure.

Health and Social Work (Expenditure)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a breakdown by programme and region of the planned expenditure figures for health and social work he announced on 9 December, Official Report, columns 184-86 in his statement to the House.

Mr. John MacKay: The breakdown of planned provision for health and social work announced by my right hon. and learned Friend by programme is as follows:

	Health £ million	Social Work £ million
1986-87
Cmnd 9702-II Provision	2,080	363
Estimated Outturn	2,086	378
1987-88
Cmnd 9702-II Provision	2,170	360
Revised Provision	2,216	389
1988-89
Cmnd 9702-II Provision	2,260	360
Revised Provision	2,310	400
1989-90
Provision	2,410	410

The figures for 1988-89 and 1989-90 have been rounded to the nearest £10 million.

The allocations to be made to health boards for current and capital expenditure on hospital and community health services in 1987-88 will be announced in due course. It is not possible to anticipate accurately expenditure in the forward years by health board area on the demand-led family practitioner services.

The greater part of the social work programme is local authority current expenditure. Local authorities do not receive specific allocations for current expenditure on individual programmes. Within their overall current expenditure guidelines local authorities are free to determine their own priorities. It is not possible therefore to break down the provision by region. Allocations to local authorities for social work capital expenditure in 1987-88 (and provisional allocations for later years) will be announced in February.

Radioactive Discharges

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will describe how the authorisation presently in force for discharges of radioactive waste at each licensed nuclear site is related to target levels or assessment levels of exposure for members of the public; whether in each case the maximum exposure calculated for any member of the public at 100 per cent. of authorised discharges is within the latest target level or assessment level applicable to a new nuclear installation; when each authorisation is next due to be reviewed; what target level or assessment level is expected to be introduced at the next review in respect of the maximum exposure of any member of the public during normal operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The procedure for deciding nuclear site authorisations, and for relating the effects of discharges to the internationally recommended dose limits, are described in Scottish Development Department "Statistical Bulletins" No. 4/1984 and No. 1/1986 which are available in the Library.

Annual levels of exposure arising from waste disposals from Scottish nuclear installations have remained well within the limits set by the International Commission on Radiological Protection and would have done so had discharges been up to the maximum permitted levels. However, the Government have accepted the most recent recommendations of the commission, and all Scottish nuclear site authorisations are being reviewed to establish what changes, if any, are required on this account. The review should be completed by 1988.

Eventide Homes

Mr. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the provision of eventide homes in the east end of Glasgow.

Mr. John MacKay: Regional and Islands Councils have a statutory responsibility to provide, or arrange for the provision of, residential and other accommodation required for their social work functions. The level of service to be provided in particular localities is for decision by the local authority concerned in accordance with its perception of needs and the availability of other relevant services in the area in question.

Certificate of Education

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many appeals against gradings in the 1986 Scottish certificate of education were received by the Scottish Examination Board; and, of them, how many were for (a) H-grade and (b) O-grade;

(2) how many appeals for regrading in the 1986 Scottish certificate of education were successful; how many for each of H-grade and O-grade led to upgrading; and if he will give comparable figures for 1985 and 1984.

Mr. John MacKay: The figures requested for 1986 are as follows. These include for the first time appeals submitted in respect of standard grade and the certificate of sixth year studies.

	Number of appeals	Successful appeals
Scottish certificate of education ordinary grade	25,990	8,742
Scottish certificate of education standard grade	[1]214	148
Scottish certificate of education higher grade	16,463	4,332
Certificate of sixth year studies	370	85
TOTAL	43,037	13,307

[1] The figures for standard grade do not include awards upgraded because of late submission of internal assessment.

The statistics for appeals in 1984 and 1985 are published in the board's annual reports, which are available in the House of Commons Library, but the figures are not directly comparable. This is because in those years the appeal arrangements were more limited. Appeals were not possible for CSYS and in 1984 were confined to candidates receiving band D at ordinary grade or less than band C at higher. In 1985 schools were invited to appeal on behalf of candidates for regrading to bands A, B, or C at either higher or ordinary grade, provided the head teacher concerned certified that significant disruption had taken place in the school as a result of the teachers' action and that the candidates' results had been adversely affected. In 1986 for the first time schools were given an unqualified right to appeal on behalf of candidates for regrading to bands A, B, C or D at higher, grades 1, 2 or 3 at ordinary grade, bands A, B, or C at CSYS, and at standard grade for upgrading of a full award to grade 1, 2 or 3 or for the conversion of a partial to a full award. Appeals continue to be assessed solely on the basis of the evidence of attainment available to the examiners.

Scottish Amateur Music Association

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the withdrawal of the Scottish Education Department grant to the Scottish Amateur Music Association.

Mr. Rifkind: The association's grant was reduced in 1984-85 and withdrawn the following year as part of a policy of phasing out small recurrent grants. I understand that an application for grant in 1987-88 is to be submitted. It will be given consideration together with applications from other voluntary organisations.

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the withdrawal of the Scottish Education Department grant from the Scottish Amateur Music Association.

Mr. Rifkind: To date representations have been received from the hon. secretary of the association and from 14 hon. Members to whom Mr. Catto, the hon. secretary, has written.

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what extra resources are being made available to Scottish health boards to provide counselling facilities to those who are found to be HIV positive.

Mr. John MacKay: The question whether additional resources should be allocated to health boards in respect of services for patients who are HIV positive will be considered in the light of the recommendations of the national working party which my right hon. and learned Friend has set up to advise on the most appropriate and cost-effective method of organising services for such patients in Scotland.

Scottish Health Education Group

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has proposals to reconstitute the Scottish Health Education Group as a special health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: No. The Scottish Health Education Group, as a division of the common services agency of the Scottish Health Service, is already part of a health authority in Scotland; and I have no plans to change the present arrangements.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many of his Department's staff, and of which grades, are involved in all aspects of the proposal for establishing city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has established a small unit within the Department as the focal point for work on city technology colleges. This has a complement of two posts at grade 5, one at grade 7, one administration trainee and two personal secretaries.

Ealing College of Higher Education

Sir George Young asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he plans to designate Ealing college of higher education as a polytechnic.

Mr. Walden: Following the decision of the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education (NAB) to defer offering advice about further polytechnic designations, my right hon. Friend contemplates no immediate announcement.

Schools (Staffing Levels)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidelines are issued by his Department on staffing levels and the provision of facilities for primary schools with a roll of 200 children; and what information he has as to the extent to which voluntary-aided schools are resourced to this level.

Mr. Dunn: Specific guidance on these matters is not issued, but the Department discusses with the local authority associations the assumptions and policies underlying the Government's expenditure plans. It is for local authorities to decide, in the light of local circumstances, on the resourcing of individual county and voluntary aided schools.

Primary Schools (Repairs)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of his Department's budget is available for repairs to voluntary-aided primary schools in the current fiscal year; and what were the comparable figures in each of the past five years.

Mr. Dunn: Provision is not made separately for grant-aiding repair work at voluntary aided primary schools. The table shows planned provision for the current year and the outturn for the past four years (comparable figures for 1981-82 are not available) for grant payments on repair work at all aided and special agreement schools in England.

	DES vote[1] expenditure	Provision for repairs at aided schools	Repair provision as percentage of vote
1986-87[2]	2,469	23·0	0·93
1985-86	[3]2,383	[4]22·6	0·95
1984-85[4]	2,259	20·1	0·89
1983-84[4]	2,173	17·7	0·81
1982-83[4]	2,070	15·5	0·75

Notes:

[1]Total Government expenditure voted in estimates which is the responsibility of the Department of Education and Science as shown in the 1986 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702).

Liverpool University

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has discussed with the vice-chancellor of the Liverpool university the discontent of students and ancillary staff at the university, details of which have been sent by the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No. Employment matters of this kind are the proper responsibility of individual universities, not of the Government. I understand that the vice-chancellor has written to the hon. Member.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his recent visit to the University of Liverpool.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My visit was interesting and useful. I formally switched on the university's combined heat and power system, inaugurated the scanning Auger microscope in the electron microscope unit and had informal but informative discu sions with the vice-chancellor and other senior academics.

Higher Education

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the latest percentage of 18-year-olds entering full-time higher education in Leyton.

Mr. Walden: The information is not available in the form requested. In 1984-85, 163 students per thousand of the average of the 18 and 19-year-old population in the London borough of Waltham Forest received a new mandatory or full-value discretionary award.

University of Wales (Welsh Language)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funds have been made available to the University of Wales board for Welsh medium teaching by the University Grants Committee in each year since its establishment.

Mr. Walden: Provision for Welsh medium teaching has been made to the University of Wales through the registry, which supports the board for Welsh medium teaching, and to University College of Wales, Aberystwyth and University College of North Wales, Bangor. The University Grants Committee does not as a general rule identify to institutions on its grant list the elements which comprise the block grant.

Down's Syndrome

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what training is recommended by his Department for teachers of pupils suffering from Down's syndrome.

Mr. Dunn: All teachers in maintained schools must have qualified status, but except in the case of teachers of deaf, partially hearing or blind pupils, no further qualifications are required. A number of courses are available leading to specialist qualifications in special education. However, it is for local education authorities to decide whether to recruit particular individuals as teachers of children with special educational needs, and what qualifications to require.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance his Department gives to education authorities regarding provisions to be made for the education of pupils with Down's syndrome.

Mr. Dunn: Advice to assist local education authorities in revising and reviewing their procedures in the light of the Education Act 1981 in order to secure that adequate provision is made for all children with special educational needs was contained in the Department's circular 1/83 issued jointly with the DHSS on 31 January 1983. The circular should be read with DES circular 8/81 which explains the provisions of the Act. I am sending the hon. Member copies of both these documents. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is responsible for special education provided by education authorities in Scotland.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many Down's syndrome children are being educated in ordinary nursery, primary and secondary schools; and what proportion that number is of all school age children who suffer from Down's syndrome;

(2) how many education authorities teach Down's syndrome children in special schools.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected by my Department. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is responsible for special education provided by education authorities in Scotland.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the extent to which the aims of the Education Act 1981 relating to education for Down's syndrome children are being met.

Mr. Dunn: The statistical returns submitted to my Department by schools and local education authorities have never recorded separately the number of Down's syndrome children or the details of the educational arrangements made for them. Accordingly no assessment can be made of the extent to which the aims of the Education Act 1981 are being met for children with this particular disability.

AIDS

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to increase the resources available for AIDS research.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government have had urgent discussions with the Medical Research Council on immediate and longer-term aspects of research into Aids. The MRC requested an increase in its grant-in-aid of £1 million a year for work that can be put in hand straightaway, and we have agreed. This money will enable a range of projects to go ahead, including a new laboratory at the National Institute for Medical Research; various epidemiological studies; and research into vaccines and chemotherapy. The Government will be considering further with the MRC and others how the overall research effort against AIDS in this country can best be carried forward and co-ordinated, and related to that going on in other countries.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Departmental Initiatives (Women)

Ms. Richardson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those initiatives of his Department which have been of benefit to women, since 1979, the cost or estimated cost of these initiatives and the proportion of the total budget of his Department this represents.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friend published on Budget day this year a Green Paper on the "Reform of Personal Taxation", which includes proposals to enable married women to have privacy and independence in their tax affairs. One of the Government's first tax measures was to exempt war widows' pension from tax: this will cost an estimted £20 million in 1986-87. We have also introduced the widows' bereavement allowance which helps a newly bereaved widow by giving her the equivalent of the married man's allowance for the tax year in which her husband died and for the following tax year. The cost of this measure in 1986-87 is estimated at £30 million.

Changes to the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme are under discussion, to provide the same benefits to the spouses and children of women civil servants as are given to men. Benefit expenditure is a charge on the civil superannuation vote; the accruing liability would require an additional employer contribution of £12 million annually, equivalent to about 1 per cent. of the Vote.

With regard to its own staff, the Treasury has nominated an equal opportunities officer, and personnel policies and procedures have been reviewed and are being monitored to ensure that they do not discriminate against women. In addition, a number of initiatives to help women combine a career with domestic commitments have been undertaken. These include increasing the opportunities for part-time work, improving the arrangements for taking career breaks, and making non-residential management training available to those with domestic commitments. All staff have been sent a booklet publicising these arrangements. The cost of the initiatives cannot be separated from the total cost of personnel management.

Profit Sharing

Mr. Steel asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the total number of participants, including employees and employers, in profit sharing schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given on 15 December, at column 425.

Wholesale Finance Markets

Mr. Maples asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he proposes to publish a consultative document on the wholesale financial markets.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Treasury and the Bank of England are today publishing a consultative document, entitled "The future regulation of the wholesale markets in sterling, foreign exchange and bullion". This was foreshadowed in my answer to a question by the hon. Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) on 7 May 1986, at columns 133-34. Copies of the consultative document are available from the Bank and the Treasury, and are being distributed by the Bank to interested parties in these markets. Comments are invited by the end of February 1987. I am also placing copies in the Library.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the research report produced for the Government by Professor C. V. Brown of Stirling University on the incentive effects of tax cuts.

Mr. Norman Lamont: 22 technical working papers have already been published. The Treasury has no plans to publish the final report itself, but Professor Brown will be free to publish his results if he wishes.

Domestic Leasehold Rental Payments (Taxation)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of revenue to be received in 1986-87 from tax on domestic leasehold rental payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Syria

Mr. Adley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has of the costs incurred by nationalised industries, directly as a result of the severing of diplomatic relations with Syria.

Mr. MacGregor: Estimates of costs incurred by the nationalised industries as a direct result of the severing of diplomatic relations with Syria cannot be given for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Film Production

Mr. Dormand asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will urgently review the fiscal arrangements in the United Kingdom for film production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the amount of rebate due to the United Kingdom which fell to be deducted at source from value added tax contributions in the current calendar year in consequence of the Fontainebleu agreement; what estimate he has made of the corrected final rebate which will fall to be payable by direct payments from the EEC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Our abatement in the 1986 Community budget is 1,900 mecu (£1,250 million). We have deducted accordingly over £100 million per month from our VAT contributions to the Community. The 1,900 mecu figure has been increased from 1,400 mecu (£920 million), the figure in the original 1986 draft budget. We do not expect a further significant correction.

Mr. Robert Sheldon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the increase in revenue for 1986-87 and 1987-88 arising from the introduction of new penalties for late value added tax returns.

Mr. Lawson [pursuant to his reply, 16 December 1986, c. 488]: When these changes were announced in 1985 it was expected that the introduction of default surcharge would result in an improved revenue flow of £60 million in 1986-87 and £350 million in 1987-88. However, receipts of value added tax have so far this year been running above expecttions. Although it is too early to assess the reasons with confidence, it is possible that this is due in part to greater than forecast effects on revenue flow of the introduction of surcharge.

Unitary Tax

Mr. Grylls asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on unitary tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The following statement is being issued today by Her Majesty's Government:

On 5 September 1986 the British Government issued a statement welcoming the passage of legislation in California to limit the use of worldwide unitary taxation. At the same time it expressed reservations about some aspects of the legislation and restated its objective of achieving a comprehensive solution to the problem.

Since then the Government has discussed developments in California with senior Parliamentarians and representatives of British industry. And the United States Administration, in testimony to Congress, has stated that, while a final resolution to the unitary tax problem has not yet been achieved, such significant progress has been made that federal legislation, or a solution by amendment of the United States-United Kingdom Double Taxation Treaty, would not be appropriate at this stage.

The British Government shares the concerns of the United States authorities that, under the Californian legislation, a foreign company should have to pay a substantial election fee in order not to be taxed by the state on its foreign income; and, further, that in three states worldwide unitary taxation remains on the Statute Book. Over the coming months it will continue to work with British business interests for improvements in the Californian legislation, for acceptable arrangements for administering the new law and for legislative change in the remaining unitary states.

The British Government welcomes the support which the Federal Administration is giving (for example, through the filing of amicus curiae briefs) to companies presently involved in unitary tax court cases brought against the Californian tax authorities. It will itself continue to support such litigation.

In recognition of the progress which has been made in the last year towards resolving the unitary tax issue, the British Government is not proposing to take action under Section 54 of the Finance Act 1985 for the present. Equally, however, in view of the further progress that is necessary, it does not intend to recommend to Parliament that Section 54 should be repealed. Both the British Government and the United States Administration will continue to keep developments under careful review.

European Community (Duty-free Sales)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with fellow European Community Ministers about the continuation of duty-free sales within member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 16 December 1986, c. 488]: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) on 15 December, at column 421, which gave an account of the meeting at the Economic and Finance Council in Brussels on Monday 8 December at which this subject was discussed.

Cigarettes

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax in total, including specific tax, ad valorem tax and value added tax, in pence per packet of 20 cigarettes is levied on (a) a packet of United Kingdom manufactured king size cigarettes retailing at £1·50 and (b) a packet of imported Virginia king size cigarettes retailing at £1·21.

Mr. Peter Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1986]. The information is as follows:

	Total tax p
United Kingdom king size cigarettes	112·3
Imported Virginia king size cigarettes	102·4

ENVIRONMENT

Urban Regeneration Grants

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his planned annual expenditure on urban regeneration grants.

Mr. John Patten: Urban regeneration grant will be paid under the authority of part III of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 towards the cost of regeneration programmes carried out by the private sector. The explanatory and financial memorandum to the Housing and Planning Bill estimated that there would in 1987-88 be voted expenditure under part III by the Department of the Environment in the range £10 million to £20 million. The level of expenditure in later years will depend upon the success of the initial programmes and the public expenditure provision that can be made.

County and District Councils

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of those district councils which have not yet commenced parish reviews; and what action he intends to take.

Mr. Chope: The duty of councils under section 48(8) of the Local Government Act 1972 to keep the parish arrangements in their districts under review does not extend to an obligation to carry out parish reviews under section 60. My right hon. Friend would not normally seek to question the exercise of their discretion in this. They are not required to notify him when they commence a review, and I am therefore unable to provide the list requested.

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of electors per councillor in county and district councils in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

The table gives for each county in England and Wales, the number of electors per county councillor and the number of electors per district councillor, based on the number of local government electors on the 1986 electoral registers as shown in "Electoral Statistics — Local Government 1986" (OPCS Monitor EL 86/1).

Voluntary Housing Sector

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review the Housing Act 1974, with particular regard to the funding of the voluntary housing sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have no such plans at present.

Public Safety (Exhibition)

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to public safety to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Chope: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 6 to 10 April 1987.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of people in each of the London boroughs who were on 30 November living in hotel bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Mr. Tracey: The table gives the number of households living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation at the end of June, the latest date for which information is available.

Secondary Mortgage Market

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet received the working group's first report on the examination of the secondary mortgage market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Thurrock on 8 December, at column 29.

Conservation

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now able to list the areas referred to in his answer of 25 July, Official Report, column 555-56, under the Ramsar convention on the EEC directive in the conservation of wild birds.

Mr. Waldegrave: Loch Eye and Loch Skene have been listed under both the EEC directive and the Ramsar convention. Priest Island has been listed under the directive. No decisions have yet been reached on the remaining sites.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) which areas have been listed to date as special protection areas under the EEC Directive 79/409 in England, Scotland and Wales, respectively; and which southern areas have been identified by the Nature Conservancy Council as meeting the criteria for listing under that directive;

(2) which areas have been listed to date under the Ramsar convention in England, Scotland and Wales, respectively, and in respect of each country; and which further areas have been identified by the Nature Conservancy Council as meeting the criteria for listing under that convention.

In addition, Lough Neagh and Lough Beg in Northern Ireland has been designated as a Ramsar site.

Details of the sites which in the opinion of the Nature Conservancy Council would be suitable for consideration as special protection areas or Ramsar sites were given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Jenkins) on 18 July 1985 at columns 241-42.

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will name those of the British wetlands identified at the Groningen conference in 1984 of the Ramsar convention as eligible for listing under the convention which have so far been listed; and when he expects designation of the remaining wetlands to be completed.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom has so far designated the following sites under the Ramsar convention:

Sites to be considered for designation must first be notified as sites of special scientific interest under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. We consider such sites on their merits as and when they are recommended by the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made with the designation of the Severn Estuary as a special protection area under article 4(2) of EEC directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds; and when he expects the designation to be completed.

Mr. Waldegrave: The first requirement for designation as a special protection area is that the area should have been notified as a site (or sites) of special scientific interest under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. The Nature Conservancy Council has not yet completed all the necessary preparation work for notification under the Act. Any subsequent proposal for designation as a special protection area will be considered on its merits.

Reema Conclad Houses

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now in a position to decide whether Reema Conclad houses are to be designated as defective under the housing defects legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The Secretary of State has no plans to designate Reema Conclad houses under the housing defects legislation.

Severn Barrage

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make it his policy that the Severn Estuary studies to be carried out into the proposed Severn barrage should include researches into water quality in the Severn Estuary;

(2) if he will make it his policy that the Severn Estuary studies to be carried out into the proposed Severn barrage should include researches into primary production, zooplankton and benthos in the Severn Estuary;

(11) if he will make it his policy that the Severn Estuary studies to be carried out into the proposed Severn barrage should include studies of the potential impact of the construction and operation of the barrage on the population of grey plover, Pluvialis squatrola, in the Severn Estuary and its surroundings;

(12) if he will make it his policy that the Severn Estuary studies to be carried out into the proposed Severn barrage should include studies of the potential impact of the construction and operation of the barrage on the population of ringed plover, Charadrius hiaticula, in the Severn Estuary and its surroundings;

(13) if he will make it his policy that the Severn Estuary studies to be carried out into the proposed Severn barrage should include researches into wetlands adjacent to the Severn Estuary.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer on 24 November 1986, at column 42. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy informed my hon. Friend on 10 December that the work programme and proposed procedures for consultation in the Severn Estuary studies will be widely circulated for comment and copies will be placed in the Library of both Houses. I will ensure my right hon. Friend is aware of the subjects my hon. Friend mentions.

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make it his policy that the Severn Estuary studies to be carried out into the proposed Severn barrage should include consultations with the Environmental Department of the European Economic Community;

(2) if he will make it his policy that the Severn Estuary studies to be carried out into the proposed Severn barrage will include consultations with the parties to Ramsar.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend will take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that the implications of the Severn barrage for nature conservation and the environment are adequately taken into consideration.

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if his Department will commission individual and specific environmental impact assessments on the sites of national importance for nature conservation which may be adversely affected by the construction and operation of the proposed Severn barrage;

(2) what provision he is making to compensate or assist the workers and managers of the nature reserves and wildfowling preserves in or near the Severn Estuary in the event that they are adversely affected by the construction of the proposed Severn barrage.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is too early to say whether any site-specific environmental impact assessments will be commissioned as part of the Severn barrage studies, and it is premature to consider any question of compensation.

Southwark

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received any representations concerning the time take by Southwark council to carry out searches and inquiries of the local land register for the sale of property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: I have received representations from my hon. Friend on this subject. I wrote to him on 8 December.

West Yorkshire Residuary Body

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on how many individual units of property and land at the present time held by the West Yorkshire Residury Body, have been empty and not fully occupied since the abolition of West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and what is the estimated loss of revenue returns from such properties not being occupied;

(2) if he will make a statement on the percentage increase of rented properties held by the West Yorkshire Residuary Body, as a proportion of property within the Wakefield metropolitan district council area;

(3) if he will make a statement on the total receipts received from the disposal and sale of property and land by the West Yorkshire Residuary Body since its inception to the present date.

Mr. Chope: I have no information on these matters. They are issues for the residuary body.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on how many individual units of property and land have been transferred to the Wakefield metropolitan district council by the West Yorkshire Residuary Body with his approval under section 67 of the Local Government Act 1985.

Mr. Chope: To date, no section 67 order has been made under the Local Governement Act 1985 relating to the West Yorkshire area.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the dates of meetings and discussions that took place between his Department and the chairman and officials of the West Yorkshire Residuary Body regarding the future use of County Hall, Wakefield; and when it was decided not to implement section 67 of the Local Government Act 1985, in relation to the possible sale of County Hall to the private sector.

Mr. Chope: I met the chairman and officers of the WYRB on 6 October 1986. I also took the opportunity of looking round County Hall when I was in Wakefield on 23 October. There have been a number of meetings between my officials and officers of the WYRB. I understand that County Hall is now being marketed by the residuary body for the benefit of all the ratepayers of West Yorkshire; they have not therefore applied for an order under section 67 of the Local Government Act 1985.

West Sussex Structure Plan

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his observations on the West Sussex county council structure plan.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend hopes to publish his proposed modifications to the alteration to the plan shortly.

Football Supporters

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what recent representations he has received concerning the possible introduction of a supporter's recognition card by the Football League;

(2) if he will report on any recent meetings with representatives of the Football League concerning the possible adoption of a standard membership or identification card.

Mr. Tracey: I met the Football League together with the Football Association on 9 October. At that meeting I asked the league to develop proposals, within six weeks, for the wider adoption of membership schemes at league clubs. Its report was submitted on 18 November and is being studied by the Department of the Environment and the Home Office. During the same period we have received 40 representations from members of the public, commercial organisations, football clubs, supporters' clubs and hon. Members about the introduction of membership schemes.

A series of meetings are planned during the next few weeks between Government Departments and interested bodies and I plan to meet football authorities to discuss this issue early in the new year.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many metropolitan district authorities have applied in the abolished metropolitan county council areas for the former county headquarters and county hall to be transferred to them; and how many such requests have been granted.

Mr. Chope: One metropolitan district council has applied for the freehold of the former county headquarters to be transferred to it at nil cost. The residuary body for the area concerned will be marketing the building in both the public and private sectors.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many chairmen of residuary bodies for the abolished metropolitan county councils hold other official positions on other Government bodies; what are their respective salaries or emoluments; and if he will identify their positions on such bodies.

Mr. Chope: Mr. T. McDonald, OBE, currently receives £16,544 per annum as chairman of the West Yorkshire Residuary Body. He is also chairman of the Yorkshire and Humberside and East Midlands Regional Industrial Development Board. This is an unpaid position. Mr. J. P. B. Hadfield, JP, currently receives £18,198 per annum as chairman of the Greater Manchester Residuary Body. He has accepted an invitation from my right hon. Friend to serve as chairman of the Trafford Park Development Corporation, which, subject to approval of both Houses, is to be established shortly. The terms of his appointment, including remuneration, have not yet been finalised.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies are currently being undertaken by his Department in connection with the reorganisation of local government.

Dr. Boyson: No special studies are being undertaken but proposals under part IV of the Local Government Act 1972 from the Local Government Boundary Commission for England are regularly considered. We also take note of reports and studies sent in by a variety of organisations.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to establish further non-departmental public bodies in London to assume functions currently undertaken by local government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has no such proposals at present.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to lay before the House the information provided under section 56 of the Local Government Act 1985 about the effect on abolition of the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils on local authority manpower; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The information to which the hon. Member refers has today been laid in the Library of the House.

I am very pleased to see that the manpower savings which were expected to flow from the removal of this unnecessary and expensive tier of local government have been achieved. Information provided to the "Joint Manpower Watch" and the returns from London boroughs and metropolitan districts indicates that the equivalent of 8,100 fewer full-time staff were employed by local authorities in June 1986 than in June 1985 as a direct result of abolition.

After taking into account those staff which transferred to other public bodies at abolition, it is clear that the Government's forecast of 7,000 posts to be saved, which was made as long ago as November 1984, have been fully realised. This will bring a continuing annual saving to ratepayers of approximately £100 million, with further significant savings to come as the residuary bodies wind down their activities.

In the first year following abolition the one-off cost of payments to staff made redundant at abolition will reduce these savings by an estimated £60 million. This also includes the cost in 1986-87 of detriment payments to compensate staff for loss of earnings on transfer to successor authorities; these will continue — albeit at a much lower level — for seven years. The estimated number of claims for redundancy is 6,310. The great majority of these staff have left local government willingly, generally by taking early retirement; and in some areas posts have been available for all employees of the abolished authorities who wanted them.

It is not possible to equate posts saved to cost reduction in individual areas. However, in London net savings of 4,600 full-time equivalent (fte) local government staff have been realised and in the metropolitan areas savings of 3,500. The London boroughs and metropolitan districts report that in June 1986, 2,700 fte staff in London boroughs and 12,200 in the metropolitan districts were engaged on work assumed following abolition. The new authorities, including ILEA, which assumed certain GLC and metropolitan county council functions were employing some 124,200 staff at that time, and the residuary bodies 4,500. These increases have to be set against the 151,700 (full-time equivalent) staff no longer employed by GLC and MCCs.

These savings will bring an immediate benefit to ratepayers. It is up to successor authorities to ensure that the benefits are passed on to them and continue to be achieved.

I was therefore dismayed that the June "Joint Manpower Watch" returns showed a continuing underlying growth in local authority manpower. The actual annual increase reported in the year to June is 0·5 per cent. But for the effect of abolition and the transfer of staff from local government to the new Manchester airport public limited company, the overall annual growth in manpower would have been 1 per cent. This is the fourth successive quarter in which manpower has risen.

This is very disappointing. Despite the savings which the Government have achieved, local government continues to employ more staff. There is ample evidence that further savings can be made through the more economical provision of services and greater efficiency in their management, and local government has a duty to ratepayers and the public at large to ensure that these are achieved.

Old Bell's School, Portsmouth

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be making his decision with regard to the request to demolish the Old Bell's school, Portsmouth, a listed building.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following the recommendations of his advisers, English Heritage, the Secretary of State has today informed the Portsmouth city council that the decision on the application for listed building consent to demolish all but the facade of Old Bell's school, Portsmouth, has been left to the council.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received opposed to the demolition of the listed building, the Old Bell's school, Portsmouth.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Secretary of State has received a number of objections from interested bodies and societies to the proposed demolition of all but the facade of Old Bell's school, Portsmouth.

Birmingham

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet received the information he requires in respect of the proposed urban development agency organised by the private sector and Birmingham city council; and when he expects to make a decision.

Mr. Ridley: I discussed the council's urban development agency proposals when I met Councillor Knowles and others on 8 December. The council said that it would put further proposals to me in January.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why he has included the proposed inner city shopping complex at Perry Barr, Birmingham on the list of those he requires planning authorities to send to his Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: This scheme is one of several major retail proposals before planning authorities in the west midlands conurbation and totalling over 4 million sq ft in area. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment decided that nine of these schemes — including the one in Perry Barr, should not be considered in isolation from each other and issued a direction that the authorities responsible should not give planning consent without his special authorisation. Birmingham metropolitan borough council has applied for my right hon. Friend's authorisation and the hon. Member will be informed of his eventual decision.

Homelessness

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what reasons were given by the London borough of Camden for its failure to respond to his Department's requests for statistics on homelessness as indicated in the Official Report, 4 December, columns 757-58.

Mr. John Patten: None.

Council Housing

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold; how many council houses have been built; and what is the size of the council house waiting list for each year, to the latest available date, for each year since 1983 in (i) Gosport borough council, (ii) Fareham borough council, (iii) Portsmouth city council, (iv) Winchester city council, (v) Havant borough council, (vi) Eastleigh borough council, (vii) New Forest district council, (viii) Test Valley district council, (ix) East Hampshire district council, (x) Basingstoke and Deane district council, (xi) Rushmoor district council, (xii) Hart district council and (xiii) Southampton city council.

Mr. John Patten: Numbers of new dwellings completed for each of the local authorities in Hampshire and numbers of council dwellings sold by them, appear in the following issues of "Local Housing Statistics", which are available in the Library.

Dwellings completed for the local authority

	Number
1983	77
1984	78
1985	79
1986[1]	79

[1] First half 1986.

All sales of council houses

	Number
1983-84	75
1984-85	79
1985-86	79

Since publication of issue No. 79, late returns of completions in the first half of 1986 have been received and the full figures for Fareham, New Forest and Rushmoor are, respectively, 16, 87 and 12.

Also, a return of 150 council house sales in 1985-86 has since been received from Havant. Sales figures for the June quarter of 1986-87 are as follows:

	Number
Basingstoke and Deane	80
East Hampshire	37
Eastleigh	32
Fareham	23
Gosport	32
Hart	11
Havant	39
New Forest	48
Portsmouth	106
Rushmoor	38
Southampton	120
Test Valley	44
Winchester	65

The only available figures on councils' housing waiting lists are from the 1986 housing investment programme returns. The numbers of households on the lists at 1 April 1986 and the increase or decrease since 1 April 1985 appear in columns B51 and B53, respectively, of the "HIP1 (1986) all items print", which is available in the Library.

Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review local authority housing revenue accounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Following discussions with the local authority associations, I have concluded that it would now be timely to review the operation of the present system of local authority housing revenue accounts. The legislation governing these accounts has remained essentially unchanged for 50 years. During that period there have been considerable developments in housing policy, and in accounting and financial management techniques. One purpose of the review will be to assess the implications of these developments for housing finance. The terms of reference for the review, which have been agreed with the local authority associations, are as follows:

To review the present legislation and conventions relating to housing revenue accounts, in the light of the other responsibilities of local authorities and current best practice, in order to devise a modified financial structure for the provision of housing by local authorities under part II of the Housing Act 1985 which will encourage effective financial management.

The review, which will also extend to Wales, will be carried out by a joint working party of officials from my Department, with Welsh Office and the local authority associations. They will consult as necessary with the Audit Commission and the professional bodies, and submit a report to the housing consultative council.

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take action against local authorities whose revenue expenditure on management and maintenance of their housing stock is less than the amount reckonable for housing subsidy.

Mr. John Patten: My Department has written today to the local authority associations to consult them on proposals for modifying the provisions of the general determination of reckonable expenditure on management and maintenance to be made for 1987-88. It is proposed that entitlement to housing subsidy should be based either on a notional amount obtained by adding a percentage increase to reckonable expenditure for the previous year, in accordance with previous practice, or on an authority's actual expenditure on management and maintenance, whichever is the lower.

A small number of authorities have been changing their method of financing repairs in such a way as to reduce their revenue expenditure and increase their entitlement to housing subsidy. To prevent further authorities doing so, my Department is also proposing to the local authority associations that the general determination of reckonable expenditure for 1986-87 should be amended by deducting from reckonable expenditure any shortfall in an authority's actual expenditure on management and maintenance in 1986-87 which is attributable to a change in financing practice made after today.

Comments on these proposals have been invited by 19 January so that they can be considered alongside the responses by the associations to proposals about other aspects, and the general determinations for 1987-88 can be made before the end of January.

Nitrates

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, following the publication of the report "Nitrates in Water, DOE Pollution paper No 26," he intends to seek to reduce the concentrates of nitrogen oxide per litre in public water to 50 mg; what would be the estimated cost of reducing nitrate concentrate in all such water to (i) 80 mg/litre, (ii) 70 mg/litre, (iii) 60 mg/litre and (iv) 50 mg/litre; if he intends to consult with farmers on making a contribution to the costs of any reduction in nitrate levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The current policy of ensuring that no public supplies exceed 80 milligrammes of nitrate per litre on a three-monthly average and a maximum of 100 mg-litre is consistent with advice received from the chief medical officer and is therefore being maintained. The estimated cost of reducing nitrate concentrations in public supplies below 80 mgl now is estimated to be £0·1m, and below 50 mg/1, £50 m. Estimates are not available for 60 mg/1 or 70 mg/l but most public supplies which exceed 50 mg/l are below 70mg/1. However, cost is not the only consideration because processes available to reduce nitrate content may lead to a deterioration in water quality in other respects. Consultations will be held with farming interests on the contribution farmers can make to a reduction in nitrate levels.

Water Legislation

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, further to his reply of 4 December, Official Report, column 769, he will provide a detailed analysis of the other expenditure incurred in 1985-86 and 1986-87 in respect of preparations for water legislation.

Mr. Ridley: The "other" expenditure referred to in my reply of 4 December, at column 769, represents fees paid to advisers engaged on water privatisation plus various items of office service expenditure (stationery, photocopying, and so on) incurred within the Department. The detailed breakdown is as follows:

	1985-86 (actual) £	1986-87 (estimated) £
Fees	90,185	1,275,000
Office services	13,376	25,000
Total	103,561	1,300,000

County Hall, London

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for publication of the report on the disposal of County Hall prepared by Richard Ellis for the London Residuary Body.

Mr. Ridley: The report was commissioned by the London Residuary Body. It is for it to decide about publication.

Inner London Education Authority

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an order to transfer County Hall riverside building to the Inner London education authority, together with appropriate financial provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Such a request has been made by the Inner London education authority and a reply will be sent soon.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that the cost of any new accommodation for the Inner London education authority does not fall as a further charge on the ratepayers of Inner London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: This is being discussed between the Inner London education authority and the London Residuary Body.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the standards of treatment, feeding and housing of the animals living in the animals parks of the London borough of Ealing.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have received no representations on this matter.

Premises open to the public which contain animals not normally domesticated in this country are subject to licensing under the Zoo Licensing Act 1981. Acceptable levels of animal husbandry are monitored through a system of mandatory local authority inspections and by conditions on licences.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total amount spent by the Property Services Agency on works of art in each of the past five years.

Mr. Chope: There is no single budget to cover the costs of works of art and the information is not available.

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what fee reductions have been achieved in the Property Services Agency as a result of fee competition for consultants' commissions on major works projects.

Mr. Chope: The Property Services Agency introduced fee competition in July 1984 for all consultants' commissions relating to works projects over £2 million in value. Below that value, fees are the subject of negotiation.

A recent Property Services Agency report, "Fee Competition Review Committee Report", showed that the initial fee savings which were being achieved as a result of fee competition were as follows:

	Per cent.
Architectural Commissions	15
Quantity Surveying Commissions	26
Mechanical and Electrical Engineering Commissions	15
Civil and Structural Engineering Commissions	10

These figures represent average savings of approximately 17 per cent.

A copy of the report has been placed in the House Library.

Atmospheric Pollution

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the consultative document on the control of atmospheric pollution.

Mr. Ridley: We propose new powers to set air quality standards and emission limits. We also propose to extend to local authoritis powers to control what is emitted by potential pollution sources in advance. They do not have such powers now.

This will be done in conjunction with a system of consents for safe emissions to which there would be full public access. There would be national guidelines to ensure consistency between different parts of the country. The proposals base themselves on the United Kingdom's "best practicable means" approach to the control of industrial emissions.

Taken with the Government's decision to form Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution, these proposals constitute a major rationalisation and updating of British air pollution control practice.

The paper is being sent to local authority and industrial trade associations environmental organisations and others with an interest. Comments have been asked for by 31 March 1987. Copies of the paper have been placed in the Library.

Heating Charges

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, pursuant to his reply of 20 November to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), Official Report, columns 261-62, he has yet reached a decision on the introduction of heating charges regulations under section 108 of the Housing Act 1985.

Mr. John Patten: I am grateful to all those who responded to the consultation letter on proposed regulations under section 108 of the 1985 Act issued by the Department on 16 June 1986. We have decided to look again at these proposals in the context of the review of the present system of local authority housing revenue accounts, which I announced today. A decision on the proposed heating charges regulations will therefore be made in the light of the outcome of that review.

Green Belt (Shopping and Leisure Centres)

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards applications to build large shopping and leisure centres in the green belt.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1986]: Policy on green belts remains as set out in DOE circular 14/84. My right hon. Friend and I have made it clear that large new shopping and leisure centres do not belong in green belts. When I spoke on 14 October to a conference organised by the Confederation of British Industry, entitled "The Future of Shopping—In or Out of Town?" I said:

"Hardly a week goes by without our reading in the Press of yet another vast shopping centre — or more often a 'shopping leisure complex'—which it is proposed to build in the middle of the Green Belt. Any such proposal has, of course, to be considered on its merits and in the light of general policy. Some may come to me on appeal, so I must not name names. There is provision, as there must be, for exceptions to be made in very special circumstances. But by way of general policy I would say that the promoters of some of the wilder schemes have no reason to think that they will succeed in breaching Green Belt policy. We are certainly not opposed to new methods of retailing and the benefits that modern retail stores can bring to the customer. But they do not belong in the Green Belt policy. We are certainly not opposed to new methods of retailing and the benefits that modern retail stores can bring to the customer. But they do not belong in the Green Belt. Let that be understood".

I also announced that we proposed to issue a direction requiring local planning authorities to consult the Department before granting permission for certain large new retail stores.

That direction has been issued today as an annex to a circular entitled "Policy on Major Retail Developments" published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office on behalf of my Department and the Welsh Office. A copy of the circular (21/86, Welsh Office 58,86), which also repeats Government policy on planning and large new retail developments, has been placed in the Library.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the percentage change in the housing investment programme allocation for England between the financial years 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 283]: Total provision for housing investment by local authorities in England in 1987-88 has been increased by 15 per cent. (11 per cent. in real terms) over provision for 1986-87. Because an increased proportion of this total will be taken up by the spending power local authorities possess in the form of capital receipts, the proposed allocation total, which will determine the amount of borrowing approved for housing purposes, has been reduced by 7 per cent.

United Nations Commission on Human Settlements

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether further consideration has been given to rejoining the United Nations Commission on Human Settlements.

Mr. John Patten: Following election in May of this year the United Kingdom will resume membership of the commission with effect from January 1987.

DEFENCE

Sri Lanka

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any British service men have been made available to the Sri Lanka Government for any purposes during the last three years.

Mr. Stanley: No loan service personnel have been made available to the Government of Sri Lanka in the last three years. Three RAF officers from the central flying school paid short advisory visits to the Sri Lankan air force in 1984. In addition, a small number of places on United Kingdom training courses are taken up by Sri Lankan personnel, but, as was made clear by my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement on 14 February 1985, at column 286, no British personnel are specifically dedicated to training Sri Lankan students.

Spending

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of his Department's current spending, its manpower and the jobs it supports directly and indirectly through procurement, are estimated to be in each of the following regions in England (a) the north, Yorkshire and Humberside, (b) the east midlands, (c) East Anglia, (d) the south-west, (e) the south-east, (f) the west midlands and (g) the north-west, and also in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The percentage of the Ministry's procurement expenditure in each region in 1985-86 was as follows (figures are individually rounded):

	Percentage
North, Yorkshire and Humberside	5
East Midlands	4
East Anglia	3
South West	12
South East (including London)	50
West Midlands	4
North West	14
Scotland	6
Wales	2
Northern Ireland	1

These estimates refer to direct payments to main contractors and do not take account of payments made to subcontractors.

The percentage of the 168,000 MOD civilian staff (industrial and non-industrial) in each region at 1 October 1986 was as follows (figures are individually rounded):

	Percentage
North, Yorkshire and Humberside	6
East Midlands	3
East Anglia	2
South West	25
South East (including London)	38
West Midlands	5
North West	2
Scotland	11
Wales	4
Northern Ireland	2

The percentage of the 228,000 United Kingdom service personnel deployed in the United Kingdom in each region at 30 June 1986 was as follows (figures are individually rounded):

	Percentage
North, Yorkshire and Humberside	7
East Midlands	6
East Anglia	7
South East (including London)	37
South West	21
West Midlands	4
North West	1
Scotland	9
Wales	3
Northern Ireland	5

Estimates of the total number of jobs in United Kingdom industry sustained by defence expenditure are derived from generalised statistical information. It is not possible to give separate figures for individual regions.

Overseas Personnel (Training)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence what monitoring takes place of the training of overseas military and security personnel by British commercial companies (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas.

Mr. Stanley: Such training is a matter for the companies themselves. However, my Department liaises as necessary both at home and abroad with British companies engaged in the sale of defence equipment or defence services.

ROF Leeds

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence what indication he was given prior to the purchase of the royal ordnance factory, Leeds, by Vickers as to the level of subsequent redundancies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At the time of the planned flotation in the summer, the Government were fully aware that, with limited prospects for further MOD orders for main battle tanks, the Leeds factory faced possible closure within a few years. In the short term, we were also aware that Royal Ordnance was having to contemplate significant redundancies. It therefore came as no surprise that Vickers viewed prospects in a similar light. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence indicated on 24 July 1986, at column 621, he expected the new factory Vickers undertook to build on the site to employ most, but not all, of the existing work force. At that stage it was not possible for Vickers to be precise about the level of of possible redundancies but it did not hide from us or from the work force that redundancy was inevitable if the future of the site was to be assured.

Nuclear Reactors (Training)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for defence whether he will describe the nature and duration of the courses relating to nuclear reactor technology and operations given to Royal Navy personnel selected to operate and supervise pressurised-water reactor type nuclear reactors in Her Majesty's submarines; and whether a reactor is used in such training.

Mr. Freeman: The courses are as follows:

Title	Duration	Nature
Nuclear Reactor Course	26 weeks	To provide students with the necessary knowledge to operate and supervise naval nuclear propulsion plants
Officers' Nuclear Operator Course	10 weeks	To provide students with detailed knowledge of the submarine propulsion plant and experience in operating a plant simulator under normal and emergency conditions
Nuclear Propulsion Short Course	11 weeks	To ensure that Marine Engineering Artificers have a general understanding of reactor principles, and an adequate knowledge of systems and major equipment of a submarine plant.
Nuclear Propulsion Long Course	26 weeks	To ensure that senior technical ratings are fully aware of the principles underlying the design, construction, operation and maintenance of the pressurised water reactor and associated propulsion plant, and auxiliary machinery fitted in nuclear submarines.

Reactors are not used in these courses, although students may be shown a reactor during their training.

Nuclear-powered Submarines

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence what exchange of information has taken place between his Department and the United States Navy regarding operational and experimental experience of nuclear reactors for nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Exchanges with the United States of information concerning military aspects of nuclear technology are made under the aegis of the 1958 "Agreement between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for Co-operation on the Uses of Atomic Energy for Mutual Defence Purposes".

For reasons of national security, I cannot give details of specific items of information exchanged.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the ranks, experience and qualifications of Royal Navy personnel selected to operate and supervise PWR-type nuclear reactors in Her Majesty's submarines.

Mr. Freeman: The operation of nuclear reactors in Her Majesty's submarines is supervised by officers of the rank of commander, lieutenant commander or lieutenant and senior ratings of the rank of warrant officer or charge chief petty officer. Operators are chief petty officers and petty officers.

Officers require a B Eng honours degree and senior ratings must have completed a four year artificer apprenticeship. In addition, the following specific nuclear qualifications and experience are required:

Officers
- —Nuclear Reactor Course
- —Officers' Nuclear Operator Course
- —A minimum of 3 months on-board experience, during which the officer must qualify in all watchkeeping positions, and pass a "Flotilla Board", consisting of nuclear qualified and approved officers, to qualify for an Engineer Officers' Nuclear Watchkeeping Certificate.

Warrant Officers and Charge Chiefs
- —Nuclear Propulsion Short Course
- —Nuclear Propulsion Long Course
- —Over 6 months' operating experience and success at a Flotilla Board.

Chief Petty Officers
- —Nuclear Propulsion Short Course
- —Nuclear Propulsion Long Course
- —Over 3 months' operating experience and success at a Ship Board consisting of nuclear qualified officers

Petty Officers
- —Nuclear Propulsion Short Course
- —8 weeks' on-board training.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence in respect of the PWR mark II reactor currently being installed at HMS Vulcan, if he will state (a) the expected date of criticality, (b) the expected date of full commissioning and (c) the number of years' operating experience intended before a similar reactor is installed in one of Her Majesty's submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The expected date of criticality is mid-1987 and full commissioning should follow within a few months.

We plan to operate the prototype reactor for approximately four years before a similar reactor is used in a submarine.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence when, in respect of the PWR mark I reactor unit formerly operating at HMS Vulcan (a) the reactor first become critical and (b) commissioning was completed; how many years' operating experience have to be gained by Royal Navy personnel before being permitted to operate such a reactor in one of Her Majesty's submarines; and when the reactor unit was shut down.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The reactor first went critical in January 1965 and commissioning was completed in February 1965. The reactor was shut down in July 1984.

An operator is usually expected to spend a minimum of 15 months training, of which 12 months are spent in the classroom and simulators. At least 3 months is then spent at sea training in a nuclear submarine under experienced supervision.

Nimrod

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total expenditure by the Government to date on the Nimrod project.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 17 December. 1986.

Departmental Land Sales

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his reply of 12 December, Official Report, column 311, how many freehold and leasehold acres have been disposed of by his Department in each of the past five years.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not maintained in the form required and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, solicitors were instructed to proceed with the sale of the following freehold land in the financial years shown:

	acres
1985-86	2,720
1984-85	2,668
1983-84	2,999
1982-83	3,282
1981-82	2,865

In addition, some 7,000 acres were transferred to Royal Ordnance plc on 2 January 1985.

Airborne Early Warning System

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence why the firm CAP Scientific was engaged by his Department to do an independent assessment of the airborne early warning requirement for the Royal Air Force; and why it was dismissed after two days by his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Because we were concerned that the vital question of the risk associated with the further development necessary in either of the two AEW systems in contention in the final stages of the competition — Nimrod and E-3A — should be assessed as fairly as possible, CAP Scientific was approached to provide assistance. We quickly realised, and the firm acknowledged, that the assistance we required could not be made available in the time scale to which we were working.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any of the advance warning and control system offset work being offered by the Boeing company will be carried out under the terms of the Export Administration Act 1985 of the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We will answer shortly.

Retired Service Men (Pay)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take remedial action over disparities in rates of retired pay for service men who left in code years 1976 and 1977 and receive less than those who retired before and after those years.

Mr. Freeman: No. After considering the matter in 1979, the Government made it clear that measures to improve public service pensions affected by the previous Administration's income policy could not be given priority over the many other pressing claims on limited resources. That remains the position.

Iran (Military Equipment)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consignments of spare parts and replacements for military equipment have been dispatched to Iran from the port of Liverpool.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have no knowledge of any spare parts or replacement for military equipment dispatched to Iran from the port of Liverpool recently.

Harrier Aircraft

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, following his statement on 30 June, Official Report, columns 713-4, he can now announce his decision on the size of the second batch of Harrier GR5s; when he expects them to go into production and be delivered to the Royal Air Force; and what is the size of the batch compared with his Department's earlier plans.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No decision has yet been taken on this matter.

NATO

Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce international staff into the headquarters of the UKAIR major subordinate command of NATO; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Headquarters United Kingdom Air Forces (UKAIR) was first established in 1975 at HQ RAF Strike Command, High Wycombe, and since that time has been manned by RAF personnel. It is however one of SACEUR's major subordinate command headquarters, the remainder of which, like SHAPE itself, are manned by international staffs drawn from our NATO allies. A proposal has been made that in future HQ UKAIR should also have an international staff whose membership would of course include United Kingdom military personnel. This proposal has been endorsed by the NATO Defence Planning Committee and, subject to parliamentary approval of UKAIR's formal designation as a NATO HQ, I have agreed that a small international staff be established at HQ UKAIR at the earliest opportunity.

To designate UKAIR formally as a NATO headquarters and provide the standard facilities required for an international staff stationed at a NATO HQ in the United Kingdom, orders amending the International Headquarters and Defence Organisations (Designations and Privileges) Order 1965, and the Visiting Forces and International Headquarters (Application of Law) Order 1965, will be introduced. These amending orders will be subject to affirmative resolution.

War Casualties

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy in relation to informing (a) relatives and (b) the House of Commons about fatalities in times of war known by the Ministry of Defence to be the result of action by Her Majesty's forces.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to the reply, 2 December 1986, c. 600]: Fatalities to British service men arising as a result of action by our own forces arise very infrequently. Every incident requires very careful investigation to establish the facts as accurately as possible, after which each case is treated according to its particular circumstances, and the need to alleviate distress. Normally the operational commander will inform the next of kin as fully as possible of the relevant details once the correct facts have been established beyond all reasonable doubt except in exceptional circumstances, such as the needs of security or the risk of adding unjustifiably to distress. He will normally therefore have discretion as to the manner and timing of his explanation. Out of consideration for the relatives it is not our normal practice to give publicity to the details or circumstances of death in such cases unless the relevant information is already public knowledge or is likely to become so.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Supplementary Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the capital limit for claims for supplementary pensions for each year since 1980, in cash terms and in real terms using 1980 as a base year, and the change in the retail price index over that period.

Mr. Lyell: The information is provided in the following tables:

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the people in the United Kingdom who received supplementary benefit in the latest year for which statistics are available were staying in board and lodging houses.

Mr. Lyell: The latest available information on the numbers of people claiming supplementary benefit for charges in all types of ordinary board and lodging accommodation including hostels is for December 1985 for Great Britain and February 1986 for Northern Ireland and shows 127,000 and 1,000 recipients respectively.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many exceptionally severe weather payments were made to recipients of supplementary benefit for the month of February 1986 in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Greenock and Port Glasgow; what was the total amount paid out; and what was the average payment in (i) Scotland, (ii) Strathclyde and (iii) Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Lyell Final figures for Scotland and Strathclyde are not yet available. The latest available information is as follows:

Local office/region	Total number of payments	Total amount paid £	Average payments £ p
Scotland	84,000	1,922,578	22·89
Strathclyde	50,969	1,172,877	23·01
Greenock[1]	1,920	49,911	26·00
Port Glasgow[1]	1,072	25,666	23·94

[1] These are final figures.

Retirement Pension (Automated Credit Transfer)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are currently receiving retirement pension payments by means of automated credit transfer direct to a bank or building society account.

Mr. Lyell: About 1·1 million people received retirement pension payments by means of automated credit transfer in November 1986 (latest available figures). About 29 per cent. of newly-retiring pensioners choose this method of payment (July 1986 figure).

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the actions taken by his Department since the publication of the COMA report, designed to assist in the prevention of coronary heart disease.

Mrs. Currie: We are deeply committed to reducing the toll of coronary heart disease which is the major cause of premature death in Britain. The Department, in collaboration with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, has started a national survey of the diet and nutritional status of adults, including measurements of clinical and biomedical risk factors for coronary heart disease. The Health Education Council has produced guidance for the public based on the COMA report.

We continue the Government's anti-smoking effort, and are planning a new national campaign, "Look After Your Heart", which will inform people of the risk of heart disease and promote healthier living.

The Committee on the Medical Aspects of Food Policy (COMA) has set up a panel to continue to review the relation between diet and cardiovascular disease.

Handicapped Children

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about current provisions for the welfare of handicapped children.

Mrs. Currie: Government policy has been increasingly directed towards improving support for handicapped children and their families to enable them to remain at home or, if that is not possible, in small homely units in or near to the local community.

We have asked health authorities to ensure that by the end of 1988 no mentally handicapped child receiving long-term care should be required to live in a large mental handicap hospital. Additional central funding (£11·5 million) has been made available for this purpose and progress so far has been good. We have continued to encourage the development of joint planning of health and personal social services by the statutory agencies and voluntary bodies.

Local authorities have a duty under the provisions of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 to inform themselves of the needs of disabled children ordinarily resident in their area and to meet those needs. The Education Act 1981 placed a duty on local education authorities to identify children with special educational needs and learning difficulties. Sections 5 and 6 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, when implemented, will require social services departments to assess the needs of young disabled people leaving school.

Housing Benefit

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish, in the same format as the reply given on 5 July 1985, Official Report, column 301, the latest available estimates of recipients of housing benefit not on supplementary benefit; if he will publish estimates of the numbers of households affected by the rent taper change to be introduced in April 1987 and the number of households losing entitlement to rent rebates, again in the same format used in the information given on 5 July 1985, Official Report, columns 305-3;

(2) if he will give information on the changes to the housing benefit needs allowance by publishing a table showing the real value of the April 1987 needs allowances and disregards compared with the level at which they stood before the change to the updating formula; and if he will also publish a table giving a detailed breakdown of the numbers of households losing (a) less than 25p, (b) 26p to 50p, (c) 51p to £1 and such other ranges of losses as may be appropriate as a combined result of both the taper and needs allowance changes, distinguishing as far as possible between pensioners, those in work and other households.

Mr. Lyell: The information requested is given in the following tables. Table 1 shows the estimated potential standard housing benefit caseload at April 1987, using a traditional uprating and without a taper change. Table 2 shows the numbers affected by the rent taper change and the numbers losing all entitlement to rent rebates or allowances. Table 3 shows the proposed April 1987 needs allowances and earnings disregard and the levels implied by the traditional uprating formulae. Table 4 shows a detailed breakdown of the combined effect of the two measures.

It should, however, be borne in mind that the majority of standard housing benefit recipients will not actually face cash losses next April: for one thing, increased benefit resulting from increases in rent and rates will normally outweigh the effect of the taper change. Also, the proposed increases in the needs allowances will normally lead either to the same level of entitlement (when combined with the retirement pension increase) or to higher entitlement (for example, for most working families). Table 4 therefore represents not actual cash losses, but rather a comparison between the effects of an uprating based on the traditional formula with no taper change, and the effects of the proposed changes, with other parameters such as rent and rate levels held constant.

Any discrepancies in the totals are due to rounding. The tables show the effects on standard housing benefit only —for approximately a quarter of a million people also getting housing benefit supplement there will be no net effect because increases in the latter benefit will automatically compensate them for the changes.

Elderly People (Homes)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the private registered homes for elderly people in each of the 32 London boroughs.

Mrs. Currie: "The Directory of Private Hospitals and Health Services" includes a list of registered homes for elderly people in Greater London and elsewhere. I understand that a copy of the most recent edition, published in November 1986, will be available in the Library soon.

Drug Addicts (In-patient Beds)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of in-patient beds for registered drug addicts in each of the regional health authorities covering London.

Mrs. Currie: In-patient beds are not set aside for the treatment of registered drug addicts and most people admitted for drug misuse are treated in general psychiatric wards. At December 1985 the numbers of beds available in the four Thames regional health authorities in special in-patient units for the treatment of drug misuse were 48 beds in South-East Thames regional health authority (exclusively for drug misusers) and 50 beds in North-West Thames regional health authority (for drug and/or alcohol misusers).

J. E. Hanger and Co. Ltd.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with the management of J. E. Hanger and Co. Ltd. of Roehampton to try and resolve the recent dismissal of 300 people by that company: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I met the managing director of J. E. Hanger and Co. Ltd. on 26 November 1986, as I reported to the House on that day at column 330. He confirmed that the company is taking all possible steps to maintain its services to patients which remains our prime concern in this dispute.

The Government, who are not a party to the dispute, have urged both parties to avail themselves of ACAS, and have been encouraged that a series of talks have taken place. Both sides are remaining in contact with ACAS and it is hoped that a speedy settlement to the dispute will be reached.

Single Payments

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any information on waiting times to an appeal hearing against refusal of single payments or other benefits in Scotland.

Mr. Lyell: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 16 December at columns 471-72.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what account was taken of the Occupational Pensions Board report, Cmnd. 8649, in the formulation of the Bill which led to the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Major: Pension reforms in the Social Security Act 1986 implement proposals in the White Paper "Reform of Social Security", Cmnd. 9691. Recommendations in the Occupational Pensions Board's report "Greater Security for the Rights and Expectations of Members of Occupational Pension Schemes", Cmnd. 8649, were reflected in the new rights to information for members of occupational pension schemes in the Social Security Act 1985.

Health Personnel (Southwark)

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the numbers of doctors, nurses, midwives, dentists, opticians and pharmacists in the borough of Southwark in 1979, 1983 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information on National Health Service manpower is not available on a local authority basis. The figures shown in the table relate to the Lewisham and North Southwark health authority and Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham family practitioner committee.

It is not possible to go back to 1979 for the health authority figures because of the Health Service reorganisation that took place in 1982, but data for 1983 and 1985 are as follows:

Health Authority Manpower[1]	1983	1985
Doctors[2]	470	450
Nurses[3]	3,490	3,390
Midwives[3]	160	150

Hospital Pharmacists	50	50

[1] all figures rounded to nearest 10 whole-time equivalents.

[2] excludes senior registrars with contracts held by Regional Health Authority and occasional sessional staff in Community Health Services.

[3] includes agency staff.

Figures are given for staff employed at 30 September 1983 and 30 September 1985.

Family Practitioner Committee Manpower	1979	1983	1985
Doctors	380	393	408
Dentists in General Dental Service	236	267	275

Opticians	280	307	325
Ophthalmic Dispensing Opticians & Ophthalmic Medical Practitioners
Retail Pharmacists	160	176	188

Some midwives and (increasingly for routine investigation and treatment) nurses are employed directly by general practitioners who are then reimbursed by family practitioner committees. No figures on such midwifery and nursing staff are as yet, however, compiled centrally.

Widows Pensions

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the difference between the standard widows pension and industrial widows pension in each year since 1956; and if he will publish the corresponding real value of this differential on the movement of the retail price index.

Mr. Major: The information requested is shown in the table:

Queen Alexandra Hospital, Portsmouth

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current state of the waiting lists for orthopaedics, orthodontics and oral surgery in Queen Alexandra hospital, Portsmouth.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks in precisely the form requested. The latest information centrally available is given in the table. For current information and for out-patient waiting list figures the hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Portsmouth and South-East Hampshire district health authority.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what economies have been achieved by limited list prescribing; and to what end the resultant savings have been put.

Mr. Newton: The latest data available to the Department indicate that the savings have been in line with the original estimate of £75 million in a full year. These savings were taken into account when planning the NHS expenditure for 1985-86. The savings were not allotted to any specific purpose but form part of the general increase in resources made available to the NHS.

National No Smoking Day

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the cost to public funds of supporting National No Smoking Day 1987.

Mrs. Currie: Up to £80,000, including the costs of evaluating the results.

AIDS

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of staff of the new special health authority to replace the Health Education Council will be employed on AIDS education.

Mr. Newton: This will be a matter for the new authority to consider.

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to reduce the spread of AIDS among drug misusers.

Mr. Fowler: Drug misuse is a matter of grave concern. The Government are determined to do all that they can to tackle this problem. But in addition we have to recognise that the use of contaminated needles and syringes is one of the major ways by which the AIDS virus is spread to the general population. Worst of all, it is leading to the birth of babies already infected with the AIDS virus. Therefore, the Government propose to take two further measures.

First, we believe that it is essential to do all we can to reach drug misusers to explain both the dangers of drug misuse and of AIDS. We therefore propose to provide an extra £1 million in 1987-88 to enable drug misuse agencies to reach more drug misusers and to provide more counselling on AIDS.

Secondly, we intend to establish a number of special schemes in different parts of the United Kingdom. In addition to providing counselling as part of our wider programme, these schemes will include the exchange of used and possibly infected needles and syringes.

The first step will be to begin consultations with those most concerned locally — particularly the medical profession, the police and voluntary organisations.

The location and number of schemes will be settled in the light of these consultations.

In taking this initiative and in deciding which schemes should be chosen, the Government are taking into account that there are already some projects in operation that provide clean needles and syringes. We will wish to build on at least some of these projects in carrying forward the proposal.

An important part of these schemes will be to assess the effectiveness of such steps in preventing the spread of AIDS among drug misusers and hence to the general community.

These proposals take account of the recommendations in Dr. McClelland's report on the problem to the Secretary of State for Scotland. The Government, through more counselling, are aiming both to curtail the spread of AIDS and also to reduce the extent to drug misuse.

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish the full text of the letter that he sent to Ian Bruce of the Royal National Institute for the Blind on 11 December, concerning the severe disability premium;

(2) what is the number of people whom Her Majesty's Government estimates will be eligible for the severe disability premium;

(3) if the 1982 survey of attendance allowance claimants was used as the basis of the original estimates of the number who would qualify for the severe disability premium.

Mr. Major: The text of the letter sent to Ian Bruce of the Royal National Institute for the Blind on 11 December is as follows. It contains an estimate of the number of people who would be eligible for the severe disability premium and information about the data on which the original and revised estimates were based.

11 December 1986

Dear Mr. Bruce,

Severe Disability Premium

I gave the Government's general response to the concerns expressed by you and other organisations representing disabled people in my letter of 4 November. My office will be in touch to arrange a meeting to discuss our proposals for the Severe Disability Premium. But I thought it might be helpful if, before we met, I gave you the results of some further work to assess the numbers who might qualify for the new premium and the policy conclusions we have drawn.

Our original estimate in the closing stages of the Social Security Bill was that up to 10,000 severely disabled people might qualify for the premium at a cost of up to £12 million. This estimate was derived from information contained in the supplementary benefit annual statistical enquiry (ASE) for December 1984, the latest date available. It was based on the numbers of single housholders shown in the enquiry as also receiving the higher rate of attendance alllowance.

In view of the doubts which you and others expressed about the estimates, I asked my officials to re-examine the data; in particular to examine how many might have others living with them who, while not being part of the supplementary benefit assessment unit, could prevent the claimant receiving the premium. In fact, the ASE returns record few deductions for non-dependants living in the same household as the 10,000 single householders. But the absence of any deduction is not conclusive, since it is possible for a claimant to have non-dependants living in the household without a deduction from supplementary benefit housing costs being appropriate.

We have therefore examined whether the estimate can be checked against other data. As you know, we do not directly collect information on other members of the household in relation to attendance allowance claims. We have, however, been able to examine a special survey of 1,600 attendance allowance recipients which the Department carried out in 1982. The 1982 survey showed that over 90 per cent. of the sample had a carer living with them. In some other cases, the person was in hospital or in a home. In less than 5 per cent. of cases was the person shown as having no carer either in the household or elsewhere. These results cannot be used as precise estimates because they refer to all attendance allowance recipients, not just those on supplementary benefit, and because the sample was drawn from a population of attendance allowance recipients which was smaller than that of today.

It is clear, however, that this further examination bears out the doubts that you have expressed. I have to say, therefore, that although the data does not enable us to produce reliable separate estimates for those receiving the higher and lower rates, it does suggest that a relatively small number of people would have qualified under our original criteria. That was, and remains, far from our intention in introducing the higher premium.

In consequence we have reviewed the qualifying rules for the severe disability premium in the light of this new information. We propose to make a significant amendment so that the premium should be available also to those receiving the lower rate of attendance allowance. That is consistent with the conditions for invalid care allowance itself, which is payable where the person being looked after receives attendance allowance at either the higher or lower rate. Receipt of constant attendance allowance under the industrial injuries and war pensions scheme would also satisfy the first qualifying condition for the severe disability premium.

So far as the other qualifying rules are concerned, we think it is right to retain the emphasis on help for those living independently in the community. That is consistent with our objectives on community care; there is a similar emphasis on helping to maintain independence in the domestic assistance addition. We propose a two fold test of independent living. First, it would be a condition that the severely disabled person lived alone in the house, although couples would qualify if both partners were receiving attendance allowance. Second, the person should not be looked after by someone receiving the Invalid Care Allowance. In that case we would be concerned with receipt rather than an attempt to test eligibility.

Applying the results of the 1982 survey to the total number of attendance allowance recipients (at both the higher and lower rate) on supplementary benefit we estimate that around 7,000 people would benefit at a cost of £8 million. The comparable figures for the domestic assistance addition, which the higher premium is designed primarily to replace, are some 3,000 cases (over 90 per cent. of whom receive payments of under £10) at a total cost of under £1 million.

There are two factors which it is reasonable to assume could increase the numbers helped. First, we are attaching considerable importance in the reforms to the alignment of the income-related benefits. The rules for the severe disability premium will also apply in setting the needs level in housing benefit. It is difficult to quantify the effect of this as the data source for the housing benefit estimates — the family expenditure survey — is not sufficiently precise to enable reliable estimates on this matter to be made. But we would certainly expect there to be other severely disabled people, in particular pensioners, with incomes high enough not to need income support who would benefit from the value of the premium being taken into account when their housing benefit is assessed. Second, as was frequently pointed out to us in debate, and borne out in some of the individual examples quoted in letters, arrangements to enable severely disabled people to live independently have increased in recent years. I do not think it would be safe to try to quantify the effects of these two factors but they would imply some increase in the numbers who would be helped by the new premium.

It is clear that your doubts about the earlier estimates were justified. However, I hope you will accept that they were provided at the time on what was thought to be a reasonable basis. Our intention throughout has been to help with the extra needs of severely disabled people which it is appropriate for social security to meet. I hope you will recognise this and welcome the new proposals outlined above. I look forward to our meeting. A copy of this letter goes to the signatories of your letter of 7 August.

Yours sincerely,
John Major

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will define the term living alone in the qualifying conditions for the new severe disability premium; and if it includes disabled people living with (a) children, (b) pensioner parents and (c) disabled people receiving mobility allowance, invalidity benefit, severe disablement allowance or benefits under the war or industrial pension schemes.

Mr. Major: Living alone means living without a partner, unless the partner is also receiving attendance allowance, and without non-dependent people over the age of 18 in the household. People living with dependent children, other disabled people themselves receiving attendance allowance, or volunteers who live with them to care for them and where a charge is made for the service by the voluntary organisation providing it, would not be excluded under these conditions for the premium.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if a couple living together and in receipt of attendance allowance will both be eligible for the new severe disability premium.

Mr. Major: Where both members of a couple receive attendance allowance, they will both be eligible for the severe disability premium, providing the other qualifying conditions for receipt of the premium are satisfied.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if a disabled person in receipt of the severe disability premium will lose the severe disability premium when he begins to have a carer looking after him who is entitled to invalid care allowance.

Mr. Major: Receipt by a carer of invalid care allowance in respect of a person receiving the severe disability premium would end entitlement to the premium. The intention is that the premium would be set at the same level as invalid care allowance.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many of the people who will be eligible for the severe disability premium will be better off than under the present system of supplementary benefit; and how many people currently receive more than £23·25 in the form of (a) the domestic assistance addition and (b) additional requirements generally;

(2) Under the proposed new arrangements for the severe disability premium, how many people with disabilities will have a lower entitlement under the new income support scheme than they presently have under the supplementary benefit scheme.

Mr. Major: I refer the right hon. Member to tables 1A and 1B, and 10A and 10B of the technical annex to the White Paper, "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9691), which give the latest information available on the effects of the reform. Separate information on the effect of the severe disability premium on entitlement to income support is not available.

At December 1984, the latest date for which information is available, the number receiving an additional requirement for domestic assistance worth more than £23·25 was extremely low: the annual statistical inquiry revealed only one such sample case. The number receiving an aggregate of additional requirements higher than £23·25 was too small to estimate reliably but is unlikely to exceed 4,000. This figure may be inflated by the inclusion of some meals allowances paid to boarders.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Social Services what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on future uprating of domestic assistance additions; and how the relationships with severe disability premiums will be dealt with.

Mr. Major: My predecessor explained on 23 July 1986 at column 397 our intention to give improved transitional protection for severely disabled people receiving extensive support by way of the domestic assistance addition. The detailed provisions have not yet been finalised.

Mucodyne

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Social Services what decision he has taken in respect of Mucodyne syrup following the meeting of the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs held on 28 October.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Juveniles (Secure Care)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many secure unit places are available for those juveniles held in secure care in (a) England and Wales and (b) the Greater London area;

(2) how many secure unit places for those juveniles held in secure care were in use at the latest available date in (a) England and Wales and (b) the Greater London area.

Mrs. Currie: There are currently 325 approved secure places in the community home system in England, of which 63 are provided or managed by local authorities in the Greater London area. In addition, there are 58 secure places in youth treatment centres provided by the Department.

Information about children accommodated in secure units is routinely collected on a financial year basis. The provisional figures for 31 March 1986 were 264 children accommodated in secure units in community homes in England of which 45 were in units provided or managed by local authorities in the Greater London area. On the same date there were 55 children accommodated in secure units in the youth treatment centres. An ad hoc survey of the current occupancy of secure units has just been completed and I shall write to the hon. Member when the results have been collated.

Information about the provision and use of secure accommodation in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Medicines Commission (Homeopath)

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration he has given to the appointment of a homeopath or expert in natural medicines to the Medicines Commission.

Mr. Newton: The chairman of the British Holistic Medical Association was appointed to the Medicines Commission at the beginning of this year.

"Nitrates in Water"

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services following publication of the report "Nitrates in Water", if he will make a statement as to health implications of reducing the nitrate/litre concentrates in public water from 80 mg/litre to 50 mg/litre; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The health implications of nitrate in drinking water are set out in a letter from the Government's Chief Medical Officer to local medical officers on 27 November 1985; this letter is reproduced as appendix B to the report, "Nitrates in Water", a copy of which is available in the Library.

I am advised that there is no reason to consider that nitrate levels averaging 80 mg/litre over three months with a maximum of 100 mg/litre adversely affect health in the United Kingdom. There is therefore no health requirement for reducing the nitrate concentration in drinking water from 80 mg/litre to 50 mg/litre.

Nucleus Hospital Programme (Exhibition)

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the National Health Service nucleus hospital programme to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 12 to 16 January 1987.

Nurses

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the results of the National Health Service Management Board's inquiry into nurse recruitment in the London area.

Mr. Newton: The team studying the nursing services in London is aiming to complete its study and report to the National Health Service management board by late spring 1987. The board will then consider what local or national action may be required to remedy any problems revealed.

Local Office Staff

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the ratio of staff to claimants in the Department of Health and Social Security office, Roebuck House, Cosham, Portsmouth; and what are the ratios for 1985 and 1984.

Mr. Lyell: The ratio of staff to supplementary benefit claimants at August 1986 and for comparable times in 1984 and 1985, is as follows:

	Number
1984	1:138
1985	1:137
1986	1:128

Similar information for other benefits is not available.

Hillingdon Health Authority

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the extent to which funding of Hillingdon health authority has changed in real terms between 1982-83 and 1986-87, taking account of (i) changes in demography, (ii) medical technology, and (iii) the effects of national and regional reallocation processes.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the source of the information on which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for South Derbyshire, based her statement on 4 December, Official Report, column 1162, that Hillingdon health authority had a reserve of more than £1 million; if he will give a breakdown of this total; and if he has anything to add.

Mr. Newton: Information on Hillingdon health authority's financial position was provided by the North-West Thames regional health authority. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of the regional health authority for a fuller account of Hillingdon's present financial position.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what the total number of staff working for the Department of Health and Social Security in Portsmouth is now; and whether the number will increase after the opening of the new office in Commercial Chambers, Montgomery Way.

Mr. Lyell: The number of staff allocated to the Department's office in Portsmouth is 223. The reorganistion of office boundaries following the opening of the new office in January 1987 will also affect the Department's two offices at Havant, whose current combined complement is 142. No change is the overall complement is currently envisaged.

Health Authorities (Resources)

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the variation between district health authorities in their use of their overall cash resources as shown by their net asset or liability position.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Agency Nurses

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many agency nurses have been used by the North East Thames region during the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; and what are the comparable figures for the North West Thames region.

Mr. Newton: The precise information requested is not available centrally. However, at 30 September 1985, 850 agency nursing and midwifery staff in whole-time equivalent terms were employed by North East Thames region and 1,080 in whole-time equivalent terms were employed by North West Thames region.

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations he has had with the Royal College of Nursing about the survey being carried out into the reasons why some nurses opt for agency rather than permanent employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I understand that the Royal College of Nursing, as part of its evidence to the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine, has commissioned a survey from the Institute of Manpower Studies on, among other things, the reasons why some nurses opt for agency rather than permanent employment. There is no consultation between the parties on review body evidence, but we shall be studying the RCN's survey with interest in due course.

Doctors (Shortages)

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has received from the National Association of Health Authorities about shortages of doctors in particular specialties; and if he has anything to add to the statement made by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) on this subject on 4 December, Official Report, column 1154.

Mr. Newton: We have received from the National Association of Health Authorities a copy of its survey of difficulties in the recruitment of junior doctors. Representatives of NAHA have also met with departmental officials on the matter to consider how such difficulties could be avoided. The possible means of resolving the current difficulties that emerged from these and other discussions were discussed on 4 December and I have nothing to add to my hon. Friend's statement.

NHS (Speech Therapists)

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 69, the health authorities involved in the cases referred to have yet received the formal judgment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The health authorities concerned have now received the written reasons for the tribunal's decision. I understand that the claimants are considering the possibility of an appeal.

National Association of Family Support Groups

Mr. Terry Fields asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met the National Association of Family Support Groups; what was discussed; and when he intends to meet them again.

Mrs. Currie: The National Association of Family Support Groups has not approached us for a meeting.

We have not met it and have at present no plans to do so.

Mr. Terry Fields asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what funding, in the fight against drugs, has been given to the National Association of Family Support Groups; and through which agency.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that the national association has not applied to any statutory agency for funding.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Terry Fields asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many voluntary organisations have received finance in the fight against drug abuse; to what level; what criteria must be met for funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Department makes grants to voluntary organisations under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968. Under these powers, 75 voluntary organisations are receiving a total of £6,387,000 over three years under the central funding initiative to pump-prime local projects for the development of services to people with drug-related problems. The criteria for receiving grants under the initiative are set out in circular HN(83) 13/LSSL(83)1.

In addition, three national voluntary organisations working in the drug misuse field are receiving grants totalling £438,000 in 1986-87 under the general scheme of grants under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968. This scheme, in the main, is to assist with the central costs of national voluntary organisations which cannot readily be financed otherwise. The scheme also enables grants to be awarded for limited periods for experimental or innovative local projects of potential national significance. Individual applications are carefully considered for value for money in relation to policy objectives for the personal social services and health services.

NHS (Equal Opportunities)

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on current personnel policies and procedures within the National Health Service in respect of provision of equal opportunities for employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Three quarters of a million women work in the National Health Service which is greatly dependent on them for the delivery of patient care. Health authorities need to ensure that women enjoy equal opportunities with men to develop and deploy to the full their talents, professioanl skills and expertise. In particular, their policies should take account of the fact that many women take a break in service in order to care for young children. They should not be disadvantaged in their career development as a result. We need to retain these staff and to encourage those who have left the service to come back.

With the agreement and support of the chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission, I have invited the regional personnel manager of North-West Thames regional health authority to lead a small working group to consider the personnel policies and practices needed in the NHS to provide equality of opportunity in employment and in particular to make recommendations for management of the career break. The working group includes representatives of NHS staff interests, the Department, the National Health Service training authority and the Equal Opportunities Commission. I have asked them to liaise closely with the task force on racial equality established earlier this year by the King Edward fund for London.

Census

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what public tests are being carried out for the next census of population.

Mrs. Currie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland have asked the Registrars General to conduct a voluntary census test in April 1987.

This test will cover about 80,000 households in parts of Amber Valley, Hammersmith and Fulham, Reading, Middlesbrough, Dundee city, Angus and Ross and Cromarty. Specimen forms will be placed in the Library of the House when they become available. The test is mainly concerned with procedures for collecting census forms from households but the opportunity is being taken of trying out revised forms of census question also. The questions asked on the forms will not necessarily be those used in the next full census. I hope all members of the public invited to take part in the test will do so.

The answers given in these voluntary tests will be entirely confidential and no information about individual persons or households will be passed outside the census offices.

RAWP Formula (Review)

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the report of the National Health Service Management Board on the review of the resource allocation working party formula; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: I have now received a report from the NHS management board on its review of the resource allocation working party (RAWP) formula for calculating targets for regional health authorities. I am publishing that report today. Copies are available from the Vote Office.

The Government remain committed to the principle of allocating resources more fairly across the country. Substantial progress has been made towards bringing regions closer to their target fair shares. As they move closer to target, it becomes increasingly important that the targets themselves should be as soundly based as possible.

The board's report confirms the need for a formula approach at a national level. It also confirms the general principles underlying the present formula. But it concludes that there are aspects where there is scope for improvement. These include my original concerns about the way the formula estimates relative need for health services, taking account of such factors as the pattern of illness across the country, the effects of social deprivation on health service use, and the costs of teaching hospitals and of patients living in one region but being treated in another. Other areas of concern are also identified, including the way the formula allows for higher than average labour costs in some regions. The board was able to draw on the work already done within certain regions to improve some aspects of the present formula. But this work, and other existing data and research, did not in themselves provide a basis for deciding on the precise form of the changes which should be made to the national formula. The report therefore proposes a programme of further work next year. I endorse this proposal, and the necessary further work is being pursued.

The review was concerned with the distribution of national resources to regions. However, the consultation process on the review also highlighted that many of the problems of resource allocation arise at sub-regional level. The main areas where there is scope for improvement have a much greater impact on relative need between districts within a region than between regions. I hope, therefore, that the research which we are now going to carry out will be a great help to regions in allocating resources to districts.

Meantime, I firmly endorse the report's conclusions that allocations to districts must be based on a realistic and manageable plan for services, not on the mechanistic application of a financial formula. The report recommends that I should issue planning guidelines to regions which re-emphasise the need for them to have plans which are manageable and sensitive to factors affecting service provision locally, and for allocations to be based on those plans. Regions also need to plan explicitly for factors which are not fully covered by the present formula. I welcome these recommendations and will be in touch with regional health authorities about them. In addition, I shall be using the special fund, announced last month, to provide transitional help to those regions which received the lowest growth next year under national RAWP. This is to ensure that they are able to continue to make progress towards improving services for priority groups and for patients living outside the main cities, without damaging inner city services. I shall be announcing details of the arrangements for distributing that special fund when I announce details next week of the cash increases for regions for 1987-88.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the estimated number of non-pensioners in the United Kingdom whose income is based on supplementary benefit and other forms of benefit received from his Department; what was the number in May 1979; and what was the percentage change;

(2) if he will list the total number of those in the west midlands region of working age who are in receipt of supplementary benefit or other forms of benefit from his Department, the number in May 1979; and the percentage change.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 17 November 1986, c. 75-76]: Information on the numbers of persons under pension age in receipt of supplementary benefit with or without another benefit in November 1979 and December 1984 is as follows: information for May 1979 is not available.

	Number of claimants (thousands)		Percentage change
	November 1979	December 1984
West Midlands[1]
Supplementary benefit with another benefit	60	152	+153
Supplementary benefit with no other benefit	48	177	+269
Total	108	329	+205
Great Britain
Supplementary benefit with another benefit	647	1,373	+112
Supplementary benfit with no other benefit	485	1,553	+220
Total	1,132	2,926	+158

Note: [1] By December 1984, the former west midlands social security region had been amalgamated with the new midlands region. The figures for December 1984 relate to those offices which formerly formed the west midlands region.

It is not possible to divide the figures in respect of Northern Ireland between those with other benefits and those without. The total figures are as follows:

Number of claimants (thousands)		Percentage change
1979	1984
59	126	+114

Patient Care

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1979 the number of (a) in-patient discharges and deaths and (b) new out-patients treated among patients receiving acute treatment under contractual arrangements with institutions outside the National Health Service in England.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 24 November 1986, c. 129-30]: The information requested is given in the table.

Patients receiving acute[1] treatment under contractual arrangements with institutions outside the National Health Service—England.

Year	Discharges & Deaths	New Out-Patients
1979	21,976	40,202
1980	21,011	12,435
1981	21,463	12,229
1982	22,150	14,785
1983	22,360	13,327
1984	23,887	13,650
1985	25,132	13,744

[1] Acute is defined as all specialties except geriatrics, mental handicap, mental illness and maternity.

Children's Medicines

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were dependent on supplementary benefit in London, broken down into local authority boroughs, in 1979 and on the latest available date.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1986, c. 729]: The following numbers of people were dependent upon supplementary benefit in the area previously covered by the Greater London council, in 1979 and 1984 (the latest date for which information is available):

	Number
1979	602,000
1984	996,000

Cervical Cancer Smear Tests

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish a table showing the number of cervical cancer smear tests conducted in each year from 1974 and the proportion of positive results;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the number of positive cervical cancer smear tests recorded in each year from 1974 and the proportion of those so detected who subsequently died.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 17 December 1986]: I regret that my earlier reply contained an error. In the reply I said,

"some cancers or pre-cancers would never progress to more advanced stages of the disease"

This should have read,

"some pre-cancers would never progress to more advanced stages of the disease".

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

BICC (Fibre Optics Unit)

Mr. George Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much public money from whatever sources has been paid to British Insulated Callendar Cables towards the costs of developing and setting up the fibre optics unit on the Knowsley South industrial park.

Mr. Butcher: None.

Ault and Wiborg Factory, Perivale

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the report of the Office of Fair Trading on the take-over bid for the Ault and Wiborg paint factory, Perivale by Bergers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Director General of Fair Trading expects to submit his advice to my right hon. Friend on this case shortly.

Marking Orders

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 1 December, Official Report, columns 434-35, when he expects consultations with consumer and trade associations about the possibility of making an order under section 8 of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The associations concerned have been asked to submit their comments by 30 January 1987 on a consultation letter from my Department dated 4 December. The Government will study the responses carefully and it may be necessary to clarify certain points further with those who submit comments. At present I think it unlikely that consultations will have been completed before the middle of March.

Iraq

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who represented Her Majesty's Government on the recent trade delegation to Iraq; and what their itinerary was.

Mr. Alan Clark: I visited Baghdad in November for the annual meeting of the United Kingdom/Iraq joint commission. I was accompanied by DTI and ECGD officials. I remained in the city throughout my visit.

Rolls-Royce plc (Redundancies)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and industry what representations he has received regarding possible redundancies at the Rolls-Royce plant, Hatfield.

Mr. Pattie: None.

Lloyd's (PCW Syndicate)

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the current state of progress in the negotiations with Lloyd's insurance in formulating a settlement on members of syndicates managed by Peter Cameron Webb.

Mr. Butcher: The formulation of any settlement is a matter for Lloyd's itself and the other parties involved, but I am informed that intensive negotiations are proceeding.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the timetable for implementing the bilateral agreements for the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The bilateral agreements will be implemented in the Community under regulations already agreed by all member states. The regulations are expected to be adopted by the Industry Council on 22 December following the lifting of the United Kingdom's parliamentary scrutiny reserve. This will enable the agreements to come into operation as planned on 1 January.

Quality Assurance Support Scheme

Mr. Porter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the assistance to companies made available under the quality assurance support scheme.

Mr. Butcher: The quality assurance support scheme, which was launched in 1983 to run for four years, provides assistance to firms employing up to 500 people to introduce quality management systems and to demonstrate their quality achievements through independent assessment. The aim of the scheme was to provide clear evidence of the benefits to smaller firms of good quality management and certification by building up a portfolio of successful case studies, the lessons from which could then be disseminated more widely.

To date over 600 applications have been made for assistance under the scheme, of which 372 have been received this year. This reflects growing awareness on the part of industry and commerce of the importance of quality to Britain's competitiveness, a message which the Government has been promoting vigorously through its national quality campaign. The quality assurance support scheme, which is part of that campaign and on which £3·8 million will have been spent once outstanding applications have been processed and the projects completed, has thus fulfilled its objective. It has therefore been decided that no further applications under the scheme can be accepted as from midnight today. A full evaluation of the scheme will be conducted in 1987 and its results made public.

Research and Development

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will identify the various programmes promoted by his Department within the United Kingdom and through collaborative ventures within the European Economic Community to promote research, development and production; when these programmes were inaugurated; and what are the financial resources devoted to each of them.

Mr. Pattie [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 610]: The information requested is given in the table below. Further information on research and development programmes is contained in the annual review of Government funded research and development 1985 and on measures under the Industrial Development Act 1982 in the annual report for the year ended 31 March 1986 (HC 552).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Telephone Calls

Mr. Cohen asked the Lord Privy Seal whether the log of telephone calls made within the Palace of Westminster is stored in machine readable form; how long copies will be kept; and where the log is kept.

Mr. Biffen: The telephone logging equipment which is attached to the Palace of Westminster telephone exchange stores the information on telephone calls in a machine readable form. The printing out of this information is subject to very close controls.

The equipment is capable of storing information only for the current month and the preceding month. When a print-out is taken it is kept only for as long as it is necessary to carry out the particular work for which it was obtained. The information logged for telephone extensions other than those in public places has not, and will not, be printed out without the specific authorisation of the person concerned. The equipment is located on the third floor of the Palace of Westminster.

I also refer the hon. Member to the replies which I have already given on this subject to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell); on 5 and 10 December at columns 802 and 203.

Mr. Cohen asked the Lord Privy Seal whether the system whereby telephone calls made within the Palace of Westminster are logged will be registered under the terms of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Biffen: I am advised that the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 do not apply to the information stored in the call logging equipment attached to the Palace of Westminster telephone exchange. The question of registration therefore does not apply.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will raise the matter of the alleged interceptions of hon. Members' telephones with the Select Committee on House of Commons Services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: The tandem exchange referred to in the letter which the hon. Member read to the House on 15 December (Official Report, c. 824-5) forms part of the Government telecommunications network, and as such comes under the responsibility of the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has recently reiterated the assurances that have been given by successive Governments with regard to the interception of the telephone calls of Members of Parliament on 10 December 1986, at column 161. In these circumstances I do not consider it necessary or appropriate to raise this matter with the Services Committee.

WALES

Selective Industrial Assistance

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing (a) the level of uptake of selective assistance to industry under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 in cash terms for Wales in each year since 1982 and (b) the percentage change in level of uptake between years.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The value of regional selective assistance grant offers accepted in Wales in the financial years 1982-83, 1985-86 together with the percentage change between those years is as follows:

	£ million	per cent.
1982-83	22	—
1983-84	51	+131
1984-85	39	-23
1965-86	48	+23

Scheduled Monuments

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether his Department has at any stage made an application to CADW for scheduled monument consent; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many scheduled monument clearance applications have been received for sites in Wales since CADW came into existence; how many of these have been determined; and if he will list them indicating the determination in each case;

(3) what is the role of his Department in the procedures relating to scheduled document clearance determinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Bypasses

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the length, cost or estimated cost, start and finish date for the Newbridge, Chirk Gresford bypasses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Work on the Newbridge bypass and Whitehurst link (3.1 miles) is scheduled to start before the end of December 1987, subject to the completion of remaining statutory procedures and the availability of resources. The estimated cost is approximately £12 million at current prices. Work on the Chirk bypass (1.6 miles in Wales, 0.4 miles in England) is planned to start between January 1988 and December 1990, subject to the completion of statutory procedures and the availability of resources. The estimated cost of the Welsh section is approximately £8 million at current prices. Work started on the Gresford-Pulford bypass in early December. The Welsh section is 4.5 miles (total length 6.3 miles) and the estimated cost of that section is approximately £20 million at current prices. The work is expected to take two and a half years to complete.

Poor Housing (Research)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what studies his Department has undertaken into an association between damp housing, mite infestations and allergic reactions;

(2) what studies his Department has undertaken into an association between the incidence of visible moulds on house walls and the incidence of asthma;

(3) what evidence his Department has compiled about an association between damp patches on bedroom walls and persons complaining of wheezing and breathlessness.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if the 1986 Welsh house condition survey will include comprehensive data on temperatures in occupied homes.

Mr. Mark Robinson: That is not part of the survey.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Gower on 25 November, Official Report, column 173, if he will place in the Library the result of question 96 of the schedule section M of the Welsh housing condition survey of 1981, disaggregating the figures by each county in Wales and also presenting the figures in percentage terms.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information his Department holds on the seasonal mortality of babies on the first year of life.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The Registrar General is responsible for the registration of all deaths in England and Wales. Details of infant mortality in Wales, on a quarterly basis are published in table 9 of "Population Trends", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Housing (Central Heating)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information his Department holds on (i) the proportion of all homes in Wales which have central heating and (ii) the proportion of homes in Wales which have central heating where all the occupants are over 65 years of age.

Mr. Mark Robinson: It is estimated from the Welsh house condition survey that, in 1981, 55·1 per cent. of all dwellings in Wales, and 42·2 per cent. of those dwellings in which the head of household was over 65, had central heating. Figures cannot be reliably estimated for pensioner households for later years; but the family expenditure survey suggests that in 1982-83, 59·1 per cent. of households in Wales had full or partial central heating.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what will be the capital costs of establishing each city technology college in (a) a new building or (b) a converted building.

Mr. Dunn: It is impossible to give detailed costings at this stage. The capital costs of establishing a city technology college will depend on various factors such as local property prices, the extent of any gifts or loans of furniture and equipment, and the size of the school. However, as a guide the Department has estimated that on average the total capital cost of a city technology college in converted premises would be between £3 million and £6 million, and that on average the total capital cost of a city technology college in new premises would be between £7 million and £10 million.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of the capital costs for the establisment of a city technology college his Department intends to be provided by (a) local business, commerce and industry, (b) his Department, (c) local authorities and (d) charities.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend intends that all or a substantial part of the capital costs for the establishment of a city technology college will be met from private sources such as industry and commerce or educational charities. Some assistance towards capital costs may be available from the Department. It is open to local education authorities to assist promoters by releasing surplus buildings for this purpose. The exact mix of funding will depend on the local circumstances of each individual CTC.

Church-aided Schools

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funding for new works has been granted by his Department to church-aided schools in each of the last five years; and how this has been disbursed among the main denominations.

Mr. Dunn: The annual allocations made for capital work at voluntary aided and special agreement schools take account of expenditure on specified major projects on which work is due to begin in the forth-coming year. The table shows the expenditure allowed for on such projects in each of the last five years.

£000's England only

	Roman Catholic	Church of England	Other Aided Schools
1986-87	4,831	647	396

1983-84	1,275	1,233	(nil)
1982-83	957	1,484	(nil)

Notes

(1) The sums allocated relate only to major projects costing £120,000 or more.

(2) The allocations are those announced before the beginning of the year in question and do not include subsequent revisions.

(3) The figures shown are for the expected expenditure in the first financial year on each new project and are related neither to the total value of the work to be undertaken nor to the total of allocations made.

(4) The religious denomination of a school may not be shown in its name. For the purposes of this table such schools have been included with non-denominational schools in the "Other Aided Schools" column.

(5) The 1986-87 Roman Catholic figure reflects expenditure on major reorganisations in Manchester and Liverpool.

Student Grants

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to complete his comprehensive review of future arrangements for students financial support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The work of the student support review is expected to be completed next year.

Careers Advice

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any proposals for the review of provision of careers advice in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave him on Tuesday 2 December at column 564.

Higher Education

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the projects which will be included in the public sector higher education capital programme for 1988-89.

Mr. Walden: The National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education, which advises my right hon. Friend on both capital and recurrent expenditure allocations, has deferred consideration until the new year of its advice on the projects to be included in the public sector higher education capital building programme for 1988-89.

Mr. Dover asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now announce his decisions on public sector higher education provision in 1987-88 and on the distribution of the advanced further education pool and voluntary sector quantum for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today written to the chairman of the committee of the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education (NAB) in response to the committee's advice on the disposition of student numbers in public sector higher education in 1987-88, and on the basis for distributing the advanced further education quantum of £716·5 million and voluntary sector quantum of £48·85 million for the financial year 1987-88 which I announced in the House on 6 November. I have accepted this advice except for recommendations on town and country planning education and as it bears on fine art provision.

Following my announcement that the resources available for polytechnics and colleges in 1987-88 would be nearly 8·5 per cent. up on the current year, NAB recommends that student access should be further extended in 1987-88. The target numbers now set for 1987-88 provide for nearly 3,000 more student places compared with plans for 1986-87 and a growth in recruitment of 2·5 per cent. over planned 1986 intakes. They also look forward to expansion in the priority areas of science, engineering and other vocational disciplines.

As in previous years, the greater parts of the advanced further education quantum and of the voluntary sector quantum are being allocated to local education authorities and voluntary colleges in relation to target student numbers. The allocations have been made to allow every institution a standard teaching unit of resource for each student. This is supplemented in the case of institutions whose advanced provision exceeds a quarter of the total in recognition of the higher costs associated with advanced further education.

The allocations announced today include £15 million for a range of selective initiatives in areas of high priority and in institutions of recognised strength. Polytechnics and colleges have bid competitively for funds and these have been awarded as follows:

£5·5 million for new courses in science and engineering, particularly conversion courses which will equip those with non-science backgrounds to enter advanced courses in the technologies, and on the development of new courses of teacher training in shortage subjects for non-traditional students; nearly £4 million to develop further a capacity for applied research of relevance to industry;

£2·5 million to provide for an increase in technicians in support of high technology courses;

£3 million to expand continuing education and professional updating (PICKUP).

A total of £0·25 million is included in the voluntary sector allocations to support the development of new courses of teacher training.

In addition, £1·418 million has been allocated to eight polytechnics to meet the recurrent costs of their continuing participation in phase II of the engineering and technology programme, and £2·948 million has been allocated to continue for a third year the research and biotechnology initiatives which began in 1985-86.

I have provisionally accepted NAB's advice that intakes to three public sector undergraduate courses in town and country planning should cease in order to bring about a desirable concentration in centres of strength. I propose, however, not to bring the decision into effect until 1988-89 to give the institutions affected time to make representations to me if they wish. Meanwhile, and so as not to pre-empt my final decision, I have made allowance for all existing public sector undergraduate town and country planning courses in financial allocations for 1987-88.

As regards fine art, I have decided to allocate modest additions of numbers—in all over 40 places—to certain institutions in order to moderate the overall reduction of over 20 per cent. in fine art intakes recommended to me by the NAB.

Letters are being sent today to local education authorities and institutions notifying them of my decisions. Copies of my letter to the NAB committee chairman, and of a note explaining the method by which the two quanta for 1986-87 are being distributed, together with full details of the allocations, have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Polytechnics

Mr. Dover asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures the Government are taking to increase the number of places available for students in polytechnics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave him today on public sector higher education provision in 1987-88.

Comprehensive Schools

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) to what factors he attributes differences between the examinations attainment of Catholic and non-Catholic comprehensive schools;

(2) what information is available to his Department about the comparative achievements in terms of numbers of pupils achieving five or more O-levels of Catholic and non-Catholic comprehensive schools, respectively in (a) Newcastle upon Tyne and (b) England and Wales as a whole.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information is not available centrally: the Department's examination statistics are not classified by the religious denomination of the school.

Fine Art Students

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about advanced fine art student numbers in Kent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations about fine art numbers in Kent following the recommendations to him from the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education (NAB) that the planned intake for 1987 should be substantially reduced compared with previous years. My right hon. Friend has carefully considered these representations. He has decided to accept NAB's advice for 1987-88, but is persuaded tht it would be right in the longer term to look for a restoration of fine art numbers in Kent to their existing level.

In so deciding, my right hon. Friend had particular regard to the desirability, following the creation of the Kent Institute of Art and Design of phasing out provision duplicated in the three constituent colleges. He understood that the reduction in numbers for 1987 recommended by NAB was consistent with the rationalisation of existing provision which the authority itself intends to carry through. My right hon. Friend understands, however, that the authority plans to continue the rationalisation process by launching new, replacement courses. He was not satisfied that the authority's plans to introduce new courses were sufficiently far advanced to justify the allocation of numbers in 1987, but looks to the authority to bring forward proposals for 1988 and expects then to make financial provision for them.

In-service Training

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what improvement he expects in local authority arrangements for the in-service training of teachers next year as a result of his intended new grants scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Local education authorities have responded to my proposals to improve in-service training with plans for a 17·5 per cent. increase in training expenditure from £225 million to £265 million and for better systems to identify training needs and priorities and to ensure the effectiveness of that training.

I have therefore decided to confirm my indicative allocation of £200 million aided expenditure for the scheme. I intend to confirm allocations to each authority after regulations have been laid before Parliament and come into force.

This is a major commitment by the Government to the improvement of teaching quality and to the professional development of teachers. Central Government training grants to local authorities will total £114 million. Training should be more evenly spread throughout the country. In monitoring the implementation of these plans I shall look at the extent to which authorities take account of the needs of individual teachers, of their schools and colleges and of the others covered by the scheme, and of the effectiveness of the training in improving the quality of teaching.

Advisory Board for the Research Councils

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science who will succeed to the chairmanship of the advisory board for the research councils when the term of appointment of the present chairman, Professor Sir David Phillips, expires on 22 January 1987.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have decided to reappoint Professor Sir David Phillips, FRS, professor of molecular biophysics at the university of Oxford for a further period of four years.

Disruptive Behaviour

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he proposes to take in relation to disruptive behaviour by younger pupils in primary schools in the light of the paper by Lawrence and Steed in "Educational Studies."

Mrs. Rumbold: The greater authority which the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 will confer on governing bodies and headteachers in relation to the conduct of schools will do much to secure better standards of discipline. In addition Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools is conducting a survey of good practice in the matter of behaviour and discipline which will be published in the near future.

My right hon. Friend is concerned about disruptive behaviour wherever it occurs. However the many visits to schools which the inspectorate is constantly making show that most primary and secondary schools are well ordered communities and that the overwhelming majority of pupils are well behaved for most of the time. Evidence from the inspectorate does not support the suggestion that the onset of disruptive behaviour in primary schools is getting earlier. In comparison, the studies made by Lawrence and Steed were limited in scope, sample size and duration; and I do not believe that they are a sufficient basis on which to reach any firm conclusion.

Stoker Report

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he is taking following the Stoker report about the clinical research centre.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Stoker report recommended that a multi-speciality national centre for postgraduate medical education and research should be formed by merging the MRC clinical research centre at Northwick park and the royal postgraduate medical school at Hammersmith hospital with basic medical science as an integral part of the new institution. This recommendation has been approved in principle by the Medical Research Council, which has so informed my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services and me. Detailed studies of the ways and means of implementing it are now being undertaken by the council in collaboration with the other bodies directly concerned with the proposal. No decision can, of course, be taken until these studies are complete.

The Government note this interesting and constructive initiative by the Medical Research Council, aimed at creating a new national centre of excellence in clinical research by merging these two institutions. If a practical and cost-effective scheme can be devised, it will open up new possibilities with the potential to be of great benefit, not only to medical research and the development of medical care but to our pharmaceutical and biotechnological industries. The Government will consider the results of the detailed studies, and the council's conclusions, when they are presented, with particular interest.

Captial Expenditure (Schools)

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the amount available for capital expenditure on schools in 1987-88 including the voluntary aided sector.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Local education authorities have today been informed of their allocations of prescribed capital expenditure for 1987-88, and of the allocations for capital spending by the governors of voluntary aided and special agreement schools in their area. These are as follows:

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Sleeping Arrangements)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons in the United Kingdom where on 1 December prisoners were sleeping three to a cell.

Mr. Mellor: Information on prisoners sharing cells in prisons in England and Wales is collected on the second Sunday of every month. The prison establishments in which some inmates were sleeping three to a cell certified for one prisoner on 9 November, the latest date for which information is available, were as follows:

Bedford
Birmingham
Brockhill
Canterbury
Cardiff
Dorchester
Durham
Exeter
Gloucester
Hull
Leeds
Leicester
Lewes
Lincoln
Liverpool
Manchester
Norwich
Oxford
Reading
Shepton Mallet
Swansea

Convicted Persons (Statistics)

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many men and women, respectively, who were sentenced after deferment in 1985 following conviction for indictable offences received immediate custodial sentences;

(2) how many men and women, respectively, who were convicted of indictable offences in 1985 had their sentences deferred.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1985, Supplementary Tables, Volume 4" in tables S4.8(a), S4.8(b), S4.9(a) and S4.9(b).

Police (Radioactive Incidents)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Cleveland as to the training which police in Stockton on Tees, Middlesbrough, Hartlepool and Langbaurgh areas receive in dealing with accidents involving radioactive contamination;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Cleveland as to the equipment available to the police and as to the conduct of emergency and evacuation exercises, in the Stockton on Tees, Middlesbrough, Hartlepool and Langbaurgh areas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All officers of Cleveland constabulary are made aware of the national arrangements for dealing with incidents involving radioactivity (the NAIR scheme). Officers attend initial and refresher courses in dealing with incidents involving hazardous materials, including radioactive substances. Course open to officers of other forces and emergency services are also run. Relevant equipment is held by the fire service. Contingency plans are regularly tested in exercises held with industry, including the CEGB at Hartlepool.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Durham as to the training which police in the Sedgefield, Easington, Darlington, Teesdale, Derwentside, Wear Valley, Chester-le-Street and Durham areas receive in dealing with accidents involving radioactive contamination;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Durham as to the equipment available to the police, and as to the conduct of emergency and evacuation exercises, in the Sedgefield, Easington, Darlington, Teesdale, Derwentside, Wear Valley, Chester-le-Street, and Durham areas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All officers of Durham constabulary are made aware of the existence of the national arrangements for dealing with incidents involving radioactivity (the NAIR scheme). Some officers of the rank of sergeant and above attend training courses in dealing with incidents involving radioactive substances run by Cleveland constabularly. Relevant equipment is held by the fire service and is also available from industry. During 1986 one major incident exercise has been held, and plans for the evacuation of premises were used operationally twice.

Police Widows

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the remaining numbers of pre-1956 preserved rate police widows and of the cost of implementing the police negotiating board's recommended award for them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of police widows in England, Wales and Scotland in receipt of preserved-rate pensions whose husbands retired before 1 April 1956 is estimated as 6,500. The initial cost of awarding the increase recommended by the police negotiating board is estimated as £455,000 per annum.

With regret my right hon. Friend felt unable to implement the recommendation because to do so would have been a breach of the long standing principle that entitlement under public service schemes should not be improved retrospectively. Such a breach could not be justified for this group of police widows in isolation from claims on behalf of other groups of public service widows, the cost of meeting which would in total be unacceptably high.

London Fire Brigade

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what change there has been in the standards of fire cover by the London fire brigade since 31 March 1979; and whether he plans to permit any increase in the net number of fire appliances or in the recruitment of firefighters for the brigade.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There has been no change since 1979 in the nationally applied recommended minimum standards of fire cover. Comprehensive information is not held centrally about the changes made by individual fire authorities to the level and disposition of fire cover in their areas.

We have received no proposals from the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority in respect of the establishment scheme for the London fire brigade for 1987-88. Such a scheme has to be submitted by 1 January 1987 and when received it will be carefully considered on its merits.

West Mercia Police Authority

Mr. Hawksley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been provided by his Department for the West Mercia police authority in each of the last five years; and what has been the authorised strength of the force at the end of each of those years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Until this financial year, the Home Office met 50 per cent. of the expenditure of the West Mercia police authority through police grant. The Department of the Environment also made a contribution to the remaining expenditure through block grant. Police grant is paid in advance on the basis of estimates and any under-or over-payment is corrected by adjustments to advances in later years. The actual sums paid out in each year will, therefore, be more or less than 50 per cent. of the police authority's actual expenditure in that year.

We have increased the rate of police grant for 1986-87 from 50 per cent. to 51 per cent. The table below sets out for each year the sum of police grant paid by the Home Office to the West Mercia police authority, the authorised establishment of the West Mercia police at 31 March and the actual strength of the force at that date.

1981-82	14·77	1,921	1,926
1982-83	16·48	1,923	1,916
1983-84	18·13	1,923	1,920
1984-85	20·55	1,923	1,919
1985-86	20·61	1,953	1,939

Security Lists

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used in deciding which categories of person should be included in lists maintained by the Metropolitan policy for intelligence purposes; if the possession of a criminal record is a condition for inclusion on the list; who has access to such lists; and what safeguards exist to ensure that unauthorised persons do not gain access to such lists or that unauthorised use is not made of them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: These are operational matters for the Commissioner, but the Home Office has issued guidance in a circular of 17 July 1986 on the disclosure of information—a copy of which was placed in the Library—and in guidelines on the work of Special Branch, which was published in the Fourth report of the Home Affairs Select Committee in April 1985. The guidance emphasises that only necessary and relevant information should be recorded, and that police information should not be disclosed unless there are important considerations of public interest to justify departure from that rule.

Visas

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement concerning his decision to refuse to extend the temporary admission of J. S. (Home Office reference S579 717/3(S)) on the ground of the expected confinement of his wife in December, when requested to do so by the hon. Member for Stretford;

(2) if he will make a statement concerning his decision to extend temporary admission to J. S. (Home Office reference S579 717/3(S)) on the ground of the expected confinement of his wife in December, when requested to do so by the right Reverend S. Booth-Cliborn, Bishop of Manchester.

Mr. Waddington: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time a person seeking to appeal against a refusal to issue a visa for a visit to the United Kingdom from the Indian sub-continent has to wait before the case is dealt with by an adjudicator; what proposals are being considered to speed up this process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: No appeals against refusal in the Indian sub-continent of a visa to visit the United Kingdom have yet been received by the appellate authorities and it is understood that very few have so far been lodged. Consequently it is too soon to provide the information required. The situation is being closely monitored in consultation with the appellate authorities.

Immigration

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the figures of those admitted to the United Kingdom for settlement over the past 12 months and state their country of origin.

Mr. Waddington: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Welsh Prisoners

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that every prisoner whose home is in Wales may be held within a prison in Wales if he or she so wishes.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Community/Police Consultative Group

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the reasons for writing to the community/police consultative group for Lambeth on 23 September to say that the Government have allowed the Metropolitan Police (Compensation) Act 1886 to remain on the statute book even though the Government no longer accepts the principles upon which it is based; and if he will specify the principles with which his Department disagrees.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Prisoners (Rule 43)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number and proportion of prisoners held on rule 43 in the prison department's south-east region at the end of October in 1976, 1985 and 1986, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Immigrants

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information his Department collects on the number of immigrants who have entered the United Kingdom with the stated intention of working, but who have not worked for a five-year period.

Mr. Waddington: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Tamils

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of Sri Lankan Tamils (a) men and (b) women, who were held in detention on 10 December 1986.

Mr. Waddington: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mental Health Act 1983

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in the light of responses to the consultation document issued by his Department and the Department of Health and Social Security, a decision has been reached on whether to seek to amend the Mental Health Act 1983 in respect of offenders suffering from psychopathic disorder.

Mr. Hurd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services and I are grateful for the many comments which we received in response to the joint consultation document. We have decided not to proceed with an amendment to the Mental Health Act. But we shall be giving further consideration to the procedural measures proposed in the document.

Visitors

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, how many (a) passengers in total and (b) people seeking admission as visitors who arrived at Heathrow from the Indian sub-continent on any of the days from 11 to 15 October for which figures are available were (i) granted admission, (ii) refused entry and detained, (iii) refused entry and granted temporary admission, (iv) returned to the Indian sub-continent within that period and (v) are still waiting for a decision on whether to grant leave to enter.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 252-53]: The available information relates to arrivals at terminal 3, Heathrow only in the period 11 to 15 October inclusive and is given in the table. Column (b) refers to all passengers from the Indian sub-continent; no separate information is available about those seeking entry as visitors.

(a) All passengers subject to control	(b) Passengers from the Indian sub-continent
i. Approximately 27,600	i. Approximately 5,000
ii. 244	ii. 240
iii. 323	iii. 273
iv. See *(b)*iv	iv. 226 (includes 60 passengers who returned voluntarily having been required to submit to further examination)
v. 586 on 12 December 1986	v. 554 on 12 December 1986

The replies at (a) ii and (b) ii refer to those detained overnight on the day of arrival.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers from the Indian subcontinent who were detained or granted temporary admission pending further examination between 11 and 16 October were subsequently (i) refused entry but granted temporary admission, (ii) refused entry without the grant of temporary admission, (iii) granted leave to enter and (iv) still await decisions on whether to grant leave to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 252-53]: The available information which relates only to those passengers who arrived at terminal 3, Heathrow between the 11 and 16 October is as follows:

(i) 245
(ii) 248
(iii) 50
(iv) 554 on 12 December 1986

Note: The figure at (ii) relates to those who were detained overnight on the day of arrival.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those who sought entry to the United Kingdom as visitors between 11 and 16 October are (a) still in detention, (b) still on indefinite temporary admission and (c) still awaiting an interview before a decision on whether to grant leave to enter.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 252-53]: The following is the information.

(a) none
(b) No separate figure is available.
(c) 586 on 12 December 1986

The available information relates to passengers who arrived at terminal 3, Heathrow in the period and sought entry in any capacity. Separate statistics are not kept of passengers who seek entry as visitors.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people (a) in total and (b) from the Indian subcontinent, sought leave to enter the United Kingdom as visitors on the days from 11 to 16 October for which figures are available.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 252-53]: The available information relates to the total number of passengers arriving at terminal 3, Heathrow. No separate statistics are kept of passengers who seek leave to enter as visitors.

In the period about 29,000 passengers sought entry. About 7,200 passengers arrived on flights either from or having connections from the Indian subcontinent.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers (a) in total and (b) from the Indian subcontinent, arrived at Heathrow airport on any of the days from 11 to 15 October for which figures are available.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 252-53]: The available information relates to the total number of passengers arriving at terminal 3, Heathrow. In the period about 36,500 passengers arrived of whom about 6,500 arrived on flights from or having connections from the Indian subcontinent.

Amyl Nitrite

Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to end the manufacture and sale of amyl nitrite; and if he will make a statement.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the extent of drug abuse on amyl nitrate within the scope of existing anti-drug regulations.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 651]: In the light of comments which I have recently received, I am asking the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs to consider whether there now appear to be sufficient grounds to justify controlling the alkyl nitrite group of chemicals under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

THE ARTS

Funding

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts if he is prepared to fund the National Theatre, the Royal Opera House, the English National Opera, and the Royal Shakespeare Company directly from his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 629-30]: In 1984, the Government rejected the proposal by the Education, Science and Arts Committee that these bodies should be directly funded, and I see no present reason to change that decision.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts what has been the total amount spent by his Department both directly and indirectly on funding literature in each of the past six years.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 630]: My Office gives no direct support to literature. It does, however, give substantial indirect support through three main channels: the Arts Council, the public lending right scheme, and the acquisitions budget of the public library service. Further indirect support comes through the availability of the magnificent collections of the British Library which are extensively used by scholars and authors, the reference part of which will be re-housed in the new building at St. Pancras. The relevant figures, in cash terms, are as follows:

£ million

	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86

British Library	33·5	35·7	39·6	48·8	45	46·2

I shall supply the hon. Member with details of the Arts Council funding for literature as soon as possible.

Paintings Sale (Levy)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts if he will introduce legislation to require 10 per cent. of the purchase price of all paintings sold at public auction to be used to finance the visual arts through means of a statutory levy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 630]: No. Matters relating to taxation are for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Arts Council (Grant)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts what has been the total grant by his Department to the Arts Council between 1979-80 and 1987-88.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 629]: The information is as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	61·476
1980-81	70·470
1981-82	80·361
1982-83	90·856
1983-84	94·580
1984-85	100·000
1985-86	105·000
1986-87	135·600
1987-88	138·400

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts what are the reasons for using the gross domestic product deflator in calculating the year on year grant charge made in respect of the Arts Council grant; and how the gross domestic product deflator is calculated.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c.629]: The gross domestic product deflator provides a broad measure of inflation in the domestic economy and as such is appropriately used for public expenditure work.

The deflator is calculated by dividing gross domestic product at cash prices by gross domestic product at constant prices.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts, what has been the change in the core grant paid to the Arts Council in each year between 1979-80 and 1987-88 (a) using the average earnings index and (b) using the retail price index.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 629]: Forecasts for the two indices are not published.

The change in the Arts Council's grant year on year to 1985-86, for which the indices are available, is as follows:

Per cent.	Using average earnings index	Using retail price index
1980-81	−3·9	−1·4
1981-82	+2·1	+2·3
1982-83	+3·2	+5·6
1983-84	−2·7	−0·6
1984-85	−0·8	+0·7
1985-86	−3·3	−0·8

Council of Ministers

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the achievements of the United Kingdom's Presidency of the European Council of Ministers in respect of cultural matters.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 629]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) on 15 December at column 406.

Visits

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts which countries he has visited in an official capacity since taking up his position as Minister for the Arts; and which arts institutions he visited in those countries.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 629]: I shall write to the hon. Member.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage share of income tax was paid by the top 0·25 per cent., 0·5 per cent. and 0·75 per cent. of income earners for each of the years since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information for the years 1978-79 to 1983-84 (the latest year for which reliable estimates are available) is as follows: The analysis is of single people and married couples and the quantiles are determined by reference to income tax liability.

Quantile shares of income tax

1982-83	5·9	8·4	10·2
1983-84	5·6	8·0	9·8

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of income tax was paid by those taxpayers whose earnings are (a) twice, (b) two and half times, (c) three times, (d) three and a half times, (e) four times and (f) 10 times the average wage and above; and what percentage of income tax was paid by each equivalent group in 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The table shows the percentage shares of total income tax liability for single people and married couples with gross incomes for income tax purposes above the multiples of average earnings specified. The figures for 1978-79 are based on the survey of personal incomes for that year. For 1986-87 they are based on a projection from the 1983-84 survey and are therefore provisional. I regret that it is not possible to make reliable projections of the percentage of income tax liability for taxpayers with incomes 10 times average earnings and above.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for the financial year 1986-87, the number of taxpayers in each income group expected to be receiving relief on mortgage interest and the anticipated average relief per mortgagor, together with the assumed rate of interest, in the following income bands; less than £4,000 per year, £4,000, £5,000, £6,000 £7,000, £8,000 £9,000 £10,000, £12,000 £15,000, £20,000, £25,000 and over £30,000 per year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information is given in the table. The estimates by income range are based on projections to 1986-87 of information in the 1984-85 survey of personal incomes and the 1985 family expenditure survey. The estimates include mortgages formerly under the option mortgage scheme, now subsumed under MIRAS.

The average rate of interest for 1986-87 is expected to be 11·5 per cent.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mrs. Roe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money has been invested through venture capital funds into companies employing fewer than 500 people since the inception of the business expansion scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information is currently available for the years 1983-84 and 1984-85 only. In this period £85 million was invested in companies through Inland Revenue approved venture capital funds. Information centrally available on company size indicates that all companies employed fewer than 500 people.

Film Industry

Mr. Shersby asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will investigate the possibility of revising the present conditions of the business expansion scheme to enable the scheme to play a more effective part in attracting capital investment into British feature film production business;

(2) what is his policy towards fiscal incentives for the British film production industry, in the light of the report from the British Film and Television Producers Association, of which he has been supplied with a copy, setting out the tax allowances and other fiscal incentives available to the film industry in other countries.

Mr. Dormand asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will urgently review the fiscal arrangements in the United Kingdom for film production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 668]: The film industry is taxed on the same broad lines as other businesses and we do not believe that films should be subject to a different system of taxation. But we have introduced into this system some special measures where they can be justified by the special nature of the film industry. These include alternative systems for writing off expenditure on films, and the extension of the business expansion scheme to film production companies. We believe that BES can help film companies attract equity finance and have suggested that the industry should examine ways of making better use of the scheme. If difficulties emerge we shall of course consider whether a change in the legislation would be justified.

Leasehold Rentals

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of revenue to be received in 1986-87 from tax on domestic leasehold rental payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 668]: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Venture Capital

Mrs. Roe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many venture capital companies have qualified for tax relief under section 79 of the Finance Act 1972.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Section 79 of the Finance Act 1972 is a tax charging provision relating to gains made by directors and employees on shares acquired by virtue of their employment other than under an approved share scheme. I regret that information is not available as to the number of companies which have directors and employees benefiting from the exemptions from the charge contained in the provision.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Forman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the draft regulations concerning the withholding tax arrangements for non-resident entertainers and sportsmen are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The draft regulations are being published today and copies are available in the Library. Comments should be sent to the Inland Revenue by 16 February 1987. I am sending copies to those Members who participated in the Standing Committee debates last June on the Finance Bill as promised by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary.

VAT

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations have been received in response to a consultation document issued by Customs and Excise on 7 August entitled, "VAT: Input Tax: Origin and Scope of the Right to Deduct"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson: Over 100 responses were received in writing and 23 meetings have been held with trade and professional bodies. In the light of these, I propose to introduce the following measures:

1. Right to Deduct Input Tax.—The right to deduct the input tax as expressed in section 14 and 15 of the Value Added

Tax Act 1983 is expressed in wider terms than in the EC Sixth Directive on VAT and allows businesses to recover input tax not related to the making of taxable supplies. The right to deduct will be restricted to only such input tax as is incurred in the making of taxable supplies. An exception would be required to give effect to article 17.3 of the Sixth Directive in favour of input tax incurred in the United Kingdom in respect of certain overseas and other non-taxable transactions.

2. VAT Group Registrations

a Power to Restrict Grouping. I do not propose to introduce new legal provisions restricting the present rights of companies to form VAT groups or to add or remove companies from existing groups. But Customs and Excise will in future exercise more strictly its power to refuse applications for group treatment where this appears necessary for the protection of the revenue.

b Transfer of Going Concerns. Where a business or its assets is transferred as a going concern to a VAT group which is or becomes partly exempt during the tax year in which the transfer takes place, the transaction will be treated as a supply to and by the group. The group would be responsible for accounting for the tax due.

3. Valuation of Exempt Supplies.—The provision of the Value Added Tax Act 1983 governing valuation of certain supplies not made in open market conditions at present apply only to taxable supplies. To prevent input tax deduction calculations being distorted by undervaluation of exempt supplies, these provisions will be extended to exempt supplies.

1-3. Where the above proposals require legislation, I intend to include this in the 1987 Budget and Finance Bill, to take effect from 1 April 1987.

4. Partial Exemption "de minimis" Rules.—The present partial exemption rules are open to serious distortion because they require proportional calculations to relate to the outputs of a business and not to its inputs. To protect against such distortions, it is necessary to prescribe that, as a normal rule, all calculations should relate directly to the input tax, including those calculations which show whether the business may reclaim all its input tax on de minimis grounds. In response to representations about the possible complexities for businesses, it is proposed that these rules should be as generous and simple as possible, so that a business can readily establish whther it is eligible for "de minimis" treatment, while not open to manipulation and substantial revenue loss.

The partial exemption rules will be amended to provide as follows:

(a) Where a taxable person's input tax attributable to exempt supplies amounts to less than any of the following:

(i) £100 per month on average;

(ii) Both £250 per month on average and 50 per cent. of all his input tax;

(iii) Both £500 per month on average and 25 per cent. of all his input tax;

all such input tax for the relevant period may be attributed to taxable supplies. For group registrations, the provisions will apply to the group as a whole.

(b) For the purpose of the above calculations, certain exempt supplies may be ignored. These supplies will be prescribed by regulation and will include:

deposit interest;
rent (where the input tax directly attributable to lettings is less than £1,000 a year);
insurance commissions;
mortgage commissions;
assignment of debts.

Businesses will not be allowed to take advantage of these simplification measures if they are within the financial sector or within other categories, which will be prescribed, which make these supplies as a significant part of their business.

These measures will have the effect of substantially reducing the numbers of businesses needing to do calculations in order to establish whether they fall within the partial exemption "de minimis" rules.

5. Partial Exemption Standard Method. Where the "de minimis" rules do not apply, the taxable person must apportion his input tax between that which relates to taxable and that which relates to exempt supplies. The rules for attribution of input tax will be revised as follows:

(a) Input tax must be identified and attributed to the greatest possible extent, as between taxable and exempt supplies and any other activity and only that tax attributable to taxable supplies may be deducted.

(b) The remaining input tax which cannot be directly attributed is to be apportioned by reference to the use made of the goods and services to which it relates. Customs and Excise will accept any method of calculation which produces a fair and reasonable apportionment between the taxable and exempt activities which these goods and services (or the largest conveniently ascertainable part of them) are used to support. An apportionment which attributes this remaining input tax in the same proportion as the input tax directly attributed under (i) will always be accepted. But in making such an apportionment, no account is to be taken of input tax on goods supplied in the same state, on supplies by agents under section 32(4) of the Act, on supplies which are subject to specific restriction, e.g. motor cars, or on supplies of transfers of going concerns treated as taxable under paragraph 2*(b)* above.

(c) Customs and Excise would also be enabled to allow the use of a method other than those specified above. This would include in appropriate cases a special method based on the ratio of the taxable supplies made by a business to its total supplies.

Taxable persons who have existing approval to operate a special method may continue to operate that method. Agreements negotiated between representative trade bodies and Customs and Excise would also continue unchanged. These approvals and agreements remain subject to review in the normal way. Taxable persons operating the existing standard method or becoming partly exempt because of changes in the "de minimis" rules will have to adopt the new standard method at (i) and (ii) above. If this is impractical or it is thought that it will not produce an accurate or fair result, Customs and Excise will consider allowing an appropriate special method. Individual businesses should apply to their local office; representative trade bodies should approach Customs and Excise headquarters.

6. Minor Amendments to the Partial Exemption Regulations:—The following minor amendments will also be made:

(a) Regulation 29(5). Amend to read: "The Commissioners may approve or direct different provisions for different circumstances and in particular may approve or direct, . . ."

(b) Regulation 32*(a)*. Delete "an exempt supply" and replace with "a supply".

(c) Regulation 32*(e)*. Delete "exempt".

4-6. These changes will be implemented by revised regulations made by the Commissioners of Customs and Excise and will come into operation from 1 April 1987. Drafts of the regulations will be circulated as soon as possible to those bodies which expressed an interest in seeing the text during the consultation. I will place copies in the Library of the House. The regulations are subject to the negative parliamentary procedure.

7. Appeals. There is at present no specific right of appeal to the VAT Tribunal regarding the use of partial exemption methods. Such a right will be proposed in the 1987 Finance Bill.

8. Deduction of Input Tax on Capital Goods. The EC Sixth Directive, Article 20.2, requires the input tax on capital goods to be adjusted annually over a period of five years. The United Kingdom has not implemented this measure, even though it would be desirable for the protection of the revenue. It will now be introduced (by a further amendment to the partial exemption regulations) but with effect from 1 April 1988.

9. Other Matters. Concern has been expressed that the revised partial exemption rules could have an adverse and distortive effect on recovery of input tax, in respect of capital issues, including Eurobonds. Consideration is being given to exempting from VAT the supply of services in relation to such issues.

The revenue effect of all these changes is estimated to be an increased yield of VAT in 1987-88 of £300 million.

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many responses Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have received to the consultative document "VAT Input Tax: Origin and Scope of the Right to Deduct"; how many of the responses supported the proposals set out in the consultation document and how many opposed them; and if he will arrange for copies of the responses to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Brooke: There were 105 written responses to the Customs consultative document. While almost all of them accepted the need to counter tax avoidance they drew attention to the potential compliance costs and the likely difficulty in meeting the proposed timetable. As the responses varied from the very general to a detailed comment on each option no meaningful count of those for and against each item is possible. I regret that I could not place copies of the responses in the Library without the consent of their authors, especially since some have provided detailed figures which they would regard as confidential. To seek such consent would require a disproportionate use of resources.

My right hon. Friend is announcing separately today the measures it is proposed to introduce.

Mr. Madden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek powers to make relief available to companies, charged value added tax on imported raw materials, who encounter cash flow problems caused by the delay between value added tax being charged and being repaid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: It would be neither practicable nor compatible with EC legislation to give preferential VAT treatment to imports of raw materials. Cash flow problems can be minimised, and in some cases eliminated, by taking advantage of the deferment facility for payment of import charges.

Mr. Wiggin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what gross and net revenue he expects to receive if Her Majesty's Customs and Excise implement the proposals contained in the consultative document on value added tax, "Input Tax, Origin and the Scope of Right to Deduct", issued in August; and what he estimates will be the compliance costs.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 15 December 1986, c. 426]: My right hon. Friend is announcing separately today the measures it is proposed to introduce following consideration of the responses to the consultation document on VAT input tax deduction. The revenue effect of the changes is estimated to be an increased yield of VAT in 1987-88 of £300 million.

In responding to the consultation document, many organisations and individuals drew attention to the compliance costs of the proposals particularly in relation to partial exemption. There are two major elements: first, the calculations which may have to be done by a business making some exempt supplies, to ascertain whether it can be treated on de minimis grounds as fully taxable; and, secondly, the calculations which a partly exempt business must make in respect of its entitlement to deduct input tax.

The proposed new de minimis rules have been devised in order to be as generous and simple as possible while not open to manipulation and substantial revenue loss. There will be generous monetary limits for the benefit of small businesses and a list of certain exempt supplies which may be ignored by businesses outside the financial sector. In consequence, most businesses will be readily able to establish whether they are eligible for de minimis treatment without having to make detailed calculations.

Where partial exemption calculations have to be made, there will inevitably be compliance costs. But the businesses involved will for the most part be large, with well developed accounting systems. While the proposed new partial exemption rules lay down a standard method for apportioning input tax, Customs and Excise will allow alternative methods, as they do now. The critieria for these alternative methods are simply that they should be practical, accurate and fair. Past experience is that in almost every case Customs and Excise have been able to agree either with a trade association or individual business a basis of calculation which utilies existing information systems and thereby minimises compliance costs.

EC (Own Resources)

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent judgment by the European Court of Justice concerning advance payments of traditional own resources to the European Community.

Mr. Brooke: The European Court of Justice gave a ruling yesterday in case 93/85 brought by the European Commission against the United Kingdom. The case concerned non-payment by the United Kingdom of an interest rate penalty claimed by the Commission when we delayed complying with a Commission request for an advance payment of levies and duties to the Community in May 1983.

The background to this delay was that the Government took the view that there was no clear legal obligation to make this advance payment and that Parliament's approval was therefore required through the Supply procedure: this approval could not, however, be obtained until Parliament had returned after the 9 June 1983 election. The Government's later decision not to pay the interest penalty was based on the same ground that there was no clear legal obligation to comply with requests for advance payments. The amount of interest claimed by the Commission was some £2 million.

The court's judgment finds that member states are legally obliged to meet requests for advance payments and that the Commission was therefore justified in charging the United Kingdom an interest penalty because of the delay in our payment.

The Government naturally accept the court's judgment, which clarifies the position. There are three consequences to which I should draw the House's attention.

First, the court's conclusion that member states are legally obliged to meet justified requests for advances means that such advances come within the scope of section 2(3) of the European Communities Act, 1972 and will therefore fall to be paid in future direct from the Consolidated Fund, in accordance with the direct charging provisions of that Act, rather than from Supply Estimates. The Government will, however, continue to ensure that the House is informed whenever such advances are made.

Secondly, it follows that no further drawings will be made on the current year's Estimate of £930 million for advance payment of levies and duties, approved by the House in July, beyond the £431 million which has been drawn already.

Thirdly, the interest rate penalty now confirmed by the court will be paid direct from the Consolidated Fund, again in accordance with section 2(3) of the European Communities Act, 1972, as soon as practicable.

I am arranging for copies of the court's judgment to be placed in the Library.

Cigarettes

Mr. Coombs asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was his forecast of the consumption of cigarettes following the 1986 Budget; what is his current forecast; and to what extent the difference in these forecasts is attributable to the importation of foreign cigarettes.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Coombs asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in tax on a packet of 20 cigarettes of the most popular brand since May 1979; and what has been the change in the retail price index in the same period.

Mr. Brooke: The total tax on a packet of 20 cigarettes of the most popular brand increased by 184·4 per cent. between May 1979 and November 1986. The retail price index increased by 81·4 per cent.

Departmental Expenditure

Dr. Bray asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Departments produce information on expenditure committed but not incurred; and for which of these the information is summarised for use by the Treasury.

Mr. MacGregor: Information is not held centrally of commitment records maintained by Departments and summarised for the Treasury, and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Commitment records are maintained, in accordance with standard accounting practice, by various Departments and non-departmental public bodies with trading activities. Their accounts are in the Library.

Transferable Allowances

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer if transferable allowances were introduced with no losers.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 15 December 1986, c. 426]: The revenue consequences of a move to transferable allowances depend, amongst other things, on the length of the transitional period and the basic rate of income tax at the time of the change. These are discussed in paragraphs 3.5 to 3.9 of the Green Paper, "The Reform of Personal Taxation". (Cmnd. 9756).

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many winners and losers there would be if transferable allowances were introduced at nil cost to the Exchequer; and how many would win or lose (a) less than £1 per week, (b) £1 to £2, (c) £2 to £3, (d) £3 to £4, (e) £4 to £5, (f) £5 to £7, (g) £7 to £10, (h) £10 to £15, (i) £15 to £20, and (j) more than £20 per week.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 15 December 1986, c. 426]: At 1986-87 levels of income a transferrable allowance of £2,395 would produce the same income tax yield as the current tax regime. The changes in tax liability are shown below.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the housing investment programme allocations for 1987-88.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend announced on 6 November 1986 that gross provision for capital expenditure by local authorities on housing in 1987-88 is £2,922 million — an increase of £390 million over the corresponding figure for 1986-87. Some of this expenditure will be funded from the proceeds of the sale of council houses and other assets. Most of the remainder, £1,366 million, will need to be financed by borrowing. Each housing authority is being informed of its initial housing investment programme allocation which sets the amount of its borrowing approval for 1987-88. Copies of the letters to local authorities and the schedule of initial allocations have been placed in the Library and the Vote Office.

The local authority associations have been consulted about the distribution of HIP allocations. After considering their representations and the HIP submissions made by individual authorities, it has been decided to distribute them in the following way:

£1,275 million to give each housing authority an initial allocation equal to 80 per cent. of its initial allocation for 1985-86. (These initial allocations include allocations totalling £13 million for the homes insulation scheme. This reflects a proposed restructuring of the homes insulation scheme, details of which I shall announce tomorrow). In London the amount which would have been allocated to the GLC has been distributed to the boroughs. In making these initial allocations my right hon. Friend has therefore honoured the assurances by successive Secretaries of State that authorities would receive allocations for 1987-88 of at least 80 per cent. of their initial allocations for 1985-86, and that London would not lose housing resources as a result of abolition of the GLC.

£75 million for additional allocations for projects prepared in conjunction with the estate action team (Urban Housing Renewal Unit). This represents a 50 per cent. increase on the resources available in 1986-87, and builds on the team's success in developing imaginative solutions to the problems of rundown council estates.

£14 million for additional allocations for authorities with exceptional problems in meeting their statutory obligations to home owners under the housing defects legislation.

£2 million as a reserve from which additional allocations can be made for the homes insulation schemes.

Only the initial allocations are being made today. The letters being sent to local housing authorities describe the procedures under which they can apply for additional allocations.

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the separate housing investment programme allocations for each housing authority for 1987-88 and also in each case net of capital receipts, with an estimate of the receipts available to each authority in 1987-88, together with the allocations for the current year.

Mr. Tracey: A list of individual local authorities' housing investment programme allocations for 1987-88 was placed in the Library and Vote Office yesterday. I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend the Minister of Housing's answer yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs). A list of the HIP allocations for 1986-87 is also available in the Library.

Local authorities are able to spend the prescribed proportion of their capital receipts each year, in addition to their HIP allocation. The Department has not collected any estimates from individual authorities of the level of their capital receipts in 1987-88.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each local authority (a) the rate support grant as settlement spending assumption for 1987-88 plus, for those local authorities covered by joint boards following the abolition of the metropolitan counties and the Greater London council, the rate support grant for each joint board distributed in proportion to population, (b) in 1986 prices the actual rate support grant paid in 1978-79, plus for those district and borough councils in areas also covered by a metropolitan county or the former Greater London council the rate support grant paid to the upper tier authority distributed in proportion to their then population, (c) the absolute difference between the two figures and (d) the percentage difference between the two figures for each authority.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has not yet announced the final RSG settlement for 1987-88. It is not therefore possible to make the comparison requested.

Rates

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies his Department has made of the effect of the level of rates upon jobs in particular areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Southwark (Tenants' Income)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the average income of public sector housing tenants in Southwark; and as to what proportion of that income is, on average, spent on rent payments.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Bolton

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total level of assistance given by his Department spent in the Bolton district council area in each year since 1978 broken down by category of assistance.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Water Flow (Teddington)

Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has yet received the report of the inspector on the inquiry into Thames water flow at Teddington.

Mr. John Patten: I have just received the report and am considering it.

Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many section 98 and 99 notices have been issued by the Government under the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980; and if he will list them in the Official Report together with the number of acres covered in each notice.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Royal Docks

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received and when he expects to publish the report of his inspector into compulsory purchase orders laid by the London Docklands Development Corporation for land in and adjacent to the Royal docks.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend received the inspector's report on the London Docklands Development Corporation's east docklands compulsory purchase order in September. It is unlikely that the inspector's report, which will be published with the Secretary of State's decision, will be available before spring 1987.

Toucan Berbet Birds

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the dates during the last five years on which his Department has issued import licences for toucan berbet birds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department has not issued any import licences for the toucan berbet (Semnovnis ramphastinus) during the last five years.

Imports of this species require a licence under section 1 of the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976. All applications for licences are considered on their merits in the light of such advices may be received from the Department's scientific advisers, the Nature Conservancy Council, on the conservation status of the species in the wild.

Landlords

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what representations he has received about the rent limits in respect of the implied terms as to fitness for human habitation from public sector landlords and private sector landlords;

(2) if he will bring forward legislation to amend the rent limits in section 8 of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985 so as to enable tenants to take action to force landlords to maintain fitness for human habitation;

(3) how many (a) local authority and (b) private landlord houses are unfit for human habitation; and how many of these have rent levels above the limit which enables tenants to take action under the implied terms as to fitness for human habitation provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act;

(4) when the rent limits in section 8 of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985 were last reviewed; and what is the current real value of the limits in comparison with their value when they were last reviewed.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the average increase in rents if disposals of the former Greater London Council's seaside and country homes took place at the price being asked of Anchor Housing Association by the London residuary body.

Mr. Tracey: None.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it a condition of the disposal of the former Greater London Council's seaside and country homes that standards of maintenance, management and rent levels do not vary from one estate to another.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend will consider this when a detailed proposal for disposal of these homes is submitted by the London residuary body.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that London boroughs are consulted over the terms of disposal of the former Greater London Council's seaside and country homes before disposal takes place.

Mr. Tracey: This is a matter for the London residuary body.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extra monitoring and lettings staff which will be required within the London area mobility scheme if the former Greater London Council's seaside and country homes are transferred to several housing associations rather than one.

Mr. Tracey: None.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will use his powers under section 65 of the Local Government Act 1985 to direct the London residuary body to dispose of the former Greater London Council's seaside and country homes to Anchor Housing Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: No.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing associations are being approached by the London residuary body in respect of the disposal of the former Greater London Council's seaside and country homes.

Mr. Tracey: This is a matter for the London residuary body.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department was consulted over the decision by the London residuary body to dispose of the former Greater London Council's 3,500 seaside and country homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The Department has been kept informed of developments.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the possible date by which disposal of the Greater London Council's seaside and country homes will be effected.

Mr. Tracey: None.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to ensure that tenants of the former Greater London Council's seaside and country homes are consulted before any transfers take place; and on what conditions he will give consent to the disposals.

Mr. Tracey: The LRB was advised in a letter of 1 December that the Secretary of State would expect tenants to have been consulted prior to the transfer of seaside and country homes and would wish to be informed of their views in considering any application for consent to a disposal.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors have led him to change his policy in respect of the former Greater London Council's seaside and country homes as stated in the reply to the hon. Member for Havant (Sir I. Lloyd) on 20 February, Official Report, columns 334-5, regarding the issue of whether the homes should be owned and managed by a single housing association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: There has never been any objection to more than one housing association being involved if that seemed appropriate.

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on the date for transfer of assets from the London residuary body to Thamesmead Town Limited.

Mr. Chope: We hope that the London residuary body and Thamesmead Town will shortly be able to agree a new transfer date now that 1 January 1987 has not proved practicable.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to (a) the number of vacant properties formerly owned by West Yorkshire metropolitan county council and (b) their annual rental value; and if he will direct the West Yorkshire residuary body to ensure that these properties are occupied.

Mr. Chope: I have no information on this matter as this is an issue for the residuary body. Accordingly I have no plans to issue a direction.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how, when giving guidance to residuary bodies about the disposal of properties owned by former metropolitan county councils, he takes into consideration the needs of the successor authorities and joint bodies concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Department published guidance to residuary bodies in August 1986 on their property role. A copy was placed in the Library in August. This guidance had been produced after consultation with interested bodies, including metropolitan district councils and joint authorities.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the total level of arrears of rent payable to the Property Services Agency;

(2) what proportion of the total annual rent collectable by the Property Services Agency is represented by the total arrears outstanding at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Chope: The information is not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of rent collectable by the Property Services Agency has been collected in each of the last five financial years.

Mr. Chope: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Nitrate

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take in relation to nitrate in water supplies in light of the report of the nitrate co-ordination group published on 15 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment on 15 December at column 392 on the nitrate co-ordination group report.

Homeless Families

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the provision of homes for the homeless in the light of the information supplied to him by the London research centre in relation to the numbers of families placed in bed and breakfast accommodation by London boroughs; if he intends to take any additional steps to assist boroughs in meeting the needs of homeless families; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The Government deplore the increase in the use by London boroughs of bed and breakfast hotels for the temporary accommodation of homeless households when there are still some 27,000 local authority-owned dwellings standing empty. The Department's own code of guidance to local authorities on this matter makes clear that bed and breakfast accommodation is to be used only in the last resort.

Resources are being made available through "Estate Action" (the urban housing renewal unit) to encourage local authorities to bring back into use empty dwellings on estates for the benefit of homeless families. Several schemes have already been approved in principle and further schemes are in the pipeline.

In 1987-88 London boroughs will receive a HIP allocation of £386 million to use for purposes of housing provision and renovation, supplemented by a proportion of their capital receipts. They also stand to benefit from a share of a further £75 million of capital resources in support of housing projects worked up in conjunction with "Estate Action".

In 1987-88 the Housing Corporation will receive a national allocation of £685 million and an additional £20 million to generate between £45 million and £50 million of additional private sector investment for priority work aimed at getting homeless families out of bed and breakfast hotels and at providing accommodation for young people moving to take up jobs in areas where there is a shortage of rented housing.

Recognising that there will also be a need for temporary accommodation for homeless families, local authorities have been invited to submit to the Department for consideration on their merits proposals to acquire properties suitable for use as hostels providing such temporary accommodation.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction has arranged a meeting with the local authority associations to discuss homelessness on 19 January.

National Parks

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the national parks in the United Kingdom and indicate the number of people who serve on the boards of each of them, showing how many of them live within the area of each respective national park.

Mr. Waldegrave: The figures for the seven English national parks are as follows:

	Members	Number living within Park
Dartmoor	21	3
Exmoor	21	3
Lake District	30	12
Northumberland	27	0
North York Moors	27	7
Peak District	34	11
Yorkshire Dales	24	6

There are presently two vacancies on the Yorkshire Dales committee and one on the Dartmoor committee. The three Welsh national parks are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Housing

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice his Department issues to householders about homes experiencing condensation and about minimum internal temperatures for the maintenance of healthy conditions.

Mr. Tracey: The Department published a leaflet in October 1986, "Keep Your Home Free from Mould and Damp", containing guidance to householders on how to deal with condensation and mould. The leaflet does not contain any advice about minimum internal temperatures but does suggest, as one of the measures for combating condensation, the maintenance of low background heat all day.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to make it mandatory for new houses to require the installation of a heating system.

Mr. Tracey: No.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department holds on (i) the proportion of all homes in England which have central heating and (ii) the proportion of homes in England which have central heating when all the occupants are over 65 years of age.

Mr. Tracey: The latest information is from the 1984 general household survey. Figures for elderly households that are readily available are for households with two adults, one or both aged 60 or over and for households of one person aged 60 or over. The survey shows that:

(i) 67 per cent. of all households in England have central heating.

(ii) 61 per cent. of elderly households in England have central heating.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidance to local planning authorities to ensure adequate sound insulation is incorporated in the party walls/floors of flat conversions.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how the present British building regulations 1982 compare with similar provisions on insulation in Finland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, West Germany, France, Austria, Eire and the Netherlands.

Mr. Tracey: Information on the thermal insulation standards for the roof, walls and floors of new dwellings in various countries is included in the following table. In comparing standards, account should be taken of the internal temperatures and external weather conditions found in different countries. The requirements of the building regulations in this country are being reviewed and on 11 December the Department issued a consultative document including proposals to upgrade the standards for the conservation of fuel and power.

Noise

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue a specified performance standard for sound insulation of party walls and floors in new dwellings.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will fund a research project so as to establish comprehensive national statistics of actual noise levels which have caused nuisances.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department's planned noise research programme includes development of more extensive and longer-term monitoring of noise, and we will bear the hon. Member's suggestion in mind.

Lead

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the preliminary indications of changes to blood lead levels that have occurred as a consequence of the reduction in January 1986 of the lead content in petrol.

Mr. Waldegrave: Results from the 1986 sample surveys carried out to monitor changes in blood lead levels are currently being analysed. Provisional findings will be published early in 1987.

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any proposals to prevent unreasonable age limits being imposed in the leases of private sheltered housing developments;

(2) if he will bring forward legislation to protect leaseholders of sheltered houses, flats and bungalows;

(3) if he has an estimate of the numbers of dwellings in private sheltered housing developments; and what financial incentive his Department gives to such developments.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Insulation

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which English district councils have applied for supplementary grants under the 1986-87 homes insulation programme.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to my hon. Friend with a complete list of the authorities which have applied for additional resources from the homes insulation scheme reserve.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy's Energy Efficiency Year campaigns have been very successful in encouraging householders to pay attention to the energy efficiency of their houses. This has brought forward demand for homes insulation scheme grants, and I have therefore decided to make available now up to a further £1·5 million of resources, which is being distributed to councils in England who have exhausted their present allocations.

Nearly 90 per cent. of accessible roofs in England are now insulated, and I have decided that, next year, we should now concentrate the scheme's assistance on those people who find it most difficult to afford the costs of loft insulation. I shall therefore be laying before Parliament a new scheme, withdrawing the general grant at 66 per cent. but extending the availability of the more generous 90 per cent. grant to all householders who are in receipt of housing benefit or supplementary benefit.

This change will assist greatly those families with low incomes for whom it is most important to gain the maximum possible benefit from the money that they spend on heating their homes.

Gratuities

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is considering the representations that he has received about his proposals to seek to amend the powers which local authorities possess to award gratuities.

Mr. Chope: As far as the local Act powers are concerned, my right hon. Friend has decided not to proceed with the proposed repeals. He is, however, concerned about the extent to which these powers continue to be used, and will discuss this with the local authorities concerned.

As far as the general regulations are concerned, there is no need for gratuities to be retained in the present form. Employees who are not members of their occupational pension scheme are entitled to benefit from SERPS, and the widows of local government employees who die in service receive half-rate pensions which are largely paid for by the employers.

Therefore the amendments to the general regulations on gratuities, announced in the consultative draft circulated in July, will still allow gratuities to be paid for service up to the operational date of the regulations and will be made as soon as possible.

Telford Development Corporation

Mr. Hawksley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now set a target for the winding up of the Telford development corporation.

Mr. John Patten: The corporation has secured notable achievements both in reclaiming and developing substantial areas of the town and in attracting every welcome investment from overseas, including a number of major Japanese companies. Nevertheless there is a significant physical infrastructure programme which remains to be carried out (including environmental improvements to land in the area) and there is a continuing need to attract further private investment to secure the economic base of the town. My right hon. Friend has therefore decided after consultation with the development corporation, Shropshire county council and the district of the Wrekin council, to set 30 September 1991 as the target date for winding up Telford development corporation. The final decision and formal order will be made in the usual way after further consultations nearer that date.

Toxic Wastes

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 18 November, if he will list by date, location and substance the toxic waste spillages of which his Department is aware.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 21 November, c. 375]: My Department may become aware through informal sources of occasional spillages of toxic wastes. Since there is no requirement for such incidents to be notified to the Department, this information is not comprehensive or detailed. The information requested is therefore not available.

Mr. Eggar: The FCO in London and the British high commission in Lagos have been active in making representations to the Nigerian authorities at a variety of levels on behalf of British Caledonian Airways, in order to ensure fair treatment for the airline in the Nigerian market.

Mr. Eggar: We have made no representations to India but understand that the Indian and Bangladesh Governments have already held bilateral talks on this matter. We are consulting both the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross in Geneva to see if there is cause for concern.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the occasions since January 1985 when Her Majesty's Government or military officials have visited Iraq.

Mrs. Chalker: According to our records, officials visited Iraq in November 1986 accompanying Lord Jellicoe to the Baghdad trade fair, and in November 1986 accompanied my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade to meetings of the Anglo/Iraqi Joint Economic Commission.

An official from the FCO also paid a familiarisation visit to Iraq in March 1986, and officials from ECGD visited Iraq in May 1986 to review progress on the United Kingdom/Iraq financial protocol.

There have been no visits to Iraq by MOD officials within this period.

They have seen the extent of the problems caused by the largest refugee community in the world. We admire the generosity of the Pakistan Government. ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Register of Title

Mr. Maclennan asked the Attorney-General what recent representations he has received to the effect that the register of title to freehold land and leasehold land kept at Her Majesty's Land Registry should become public.

The Attorney-General: The Government have received no representations on this matter since May last; when the conveyancing standing committee wrote in support of the opening of the register to public inspection.

Recorders

Mr. Alton: asked the Attorney-General whether any of the present bench of recorders have been reappointed following a period of retirement from the bench.

The Attorney-General: As far as can be ascertained from the records which are available one recorder has been reappointed following a period whilst he did not sit as a recorder.

Diplock Courts

Ms. Clare Short asked the Attorney-General how many county courts judges out of the total number available have sat in the Diplock courts in Northern Ireland over the last two years.

The Attorney-General: In 1984 all 11 available county court judges sat in the Diplock courts. In 1985 12 judges were available and 11 heard Diplock cases during the year.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Attorney-General what proportion of their total sitting days county court judges have sat in the Diplock courts in Northern Ireland in each of the last two years.

The Attorney-General: In 1984 7·4 per cent. of the total sitting days of county court judges was spent in trying scheduled offences. The corresponding proportion for 1985 was 8·3 per cent.

Legal Aid

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Attorney-General if he will list all organisations and persons who have made representations to the Lord Chancellor over proposals from the efficiency team of legal aid scrutiny for the hiving-off of legal advice and assistance work; if he will indicate how many of these representations have been in favour of the scrutiny proposals and how many against; and if he will indicate what steps Her Majesty's Government now intend to take in this respect.

The Attorney-General: Some 140 representations were received in response to the Lord Chancellor's request for comments on the recommendations in the report of the legal aid scrutiny. The Government intend to publish their response to the report in the new year, and that will contain a full list of those who made representations. Many of the recommendations have met with widespread support. There has also been support for the basic objectives underlying the report's recommendations on legal advice and assistance. A majority of those responding is, however, opposed to the detailed proposals in this area.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Attorney-General whether the Lord Chancellor intends to place any constraints upon legal aid expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Since 1979, legal aid expenditure has more than trebled in cash terms, and more than doubled in real terms, which is a clear indication of the Government's continuing commitment to a healthy legal aid scheme. Nevertheless, legal aid expenditure cannot be considered in isolation from other competing demands on public funds and must be seen in the context of the Government's policies on public expenditure as a whole. The Government are always looking for ways of improving the efficiency and cost-effectiveness of the legal aid scheme. A number of proposals were put forward in the recent legal aid scrutiny report. The Government will be announcing their decision on these in the new year.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Attorney-General whether Her Majesty's Government intend to implement interim proposals for reducing delays in (a) determining applications and (b) paying moneys due to lawyers for legal aid work.

The Attorney-General: I assume the hon. Member is referring to proposals put forward in the recent legal aid scrutiny. The Government will be announcing their response in the new year.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Fatchett asked the Attorney-General what representations he has received about pay anomalies for those employed by the Crown Prosecution Service; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I understand that a number of representations about pay anomalies for those employed within the CPS have been received by the Director of Public Prosecutions and his officials. The point has also been raised by several staff in conversation with my right hon. and learned Friend the Solicitor-General who is presently undertaking a series of visits to CPS areas. Careful consideration has been given to the issues raised and a discussion paper proposing possible approaches to pay differences was circulated to chief crown prosecutors and trade unions for comment. The director is presently considering the responses received and expects to notify his proposals to chief crown prosecutors and trade unions within the next few days.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Attorney-General on how many occasions since 1 April agents have been instructed to act on behalf of the Crown Prosecution Service; and at what cost.

The Attorney-General: The total number of occasions on which agents have been instructed to act on behalf of the Crown Prosecution Service during the period 1 April to 30 November is about 31,000.

The cost of these instructions using average national costs is about £2·8 million.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Attorney-General what has been the cost of seconding qualifed lawyers to the London area of the Crown Prosecution Service.

The Attorney-General: The cost of seconding qualified lawyers from other areas of the CPS to the London area for the period 1 April to 30 November is about £430,000.

As well as the travel and subsistence costs of the seconded lawyers, this figure includes the additional costs of employing agents to undertake the work of the seconded staff. But agents would have been employed in London in the absence of seconded lawyers and this element of the total cost does not represent net additional expenditure.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Attorney-General how many prosecutions have had to be dropped because of the failure of the crown prosecution service to be in a position to proceed.

The Attorney-General: The ability of the prosecution to proceed with any particular case on a particular occasion is likely to depend on a number of variable factors—many of which relate to other agencies within the criminal justice system (for example, police, forensic science service and sometimes the defence) and are beyond the control of the director. They include (by way of example only) the availability of witnesses at the time and date specified by the court and the ability of the police to make contact with and notify those witnesses; it frequently occurs that the crown prosecution service is notified only shortly before a hearing that a particular witness is required. In such circumstances it may be necessary to seek an adjournment.

There have been instances when the prosecution has not been in a position to proceed and the court has refused an adjournment thus obliging the prosecution to discontinue. No record is kept of such instances separate from cases discontinued for other reasons. But where it is suggested that the crown prosecution service has been at fault, the case is thoroughly examined by a senior official. Experience has shown that whilst the crown prosecution service has on occasion been at fault in the majority of such cases (some of which have attracted damaging publicity for the crown prosecution service) the inability to proceed has been attributable either to a failing other than within the crown prosecution service or combination of events beyond the control of any one agency.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Attorney-General how many qualified lawyers are employed by the crown prosecution service on the latest available figures.

The Attorney-General: The number of lawyers employed by the crown prosecution service as prosecutors at 1 December 1986 was 1,229. In addition, a small proportion of administrative staff employed by the service have a legal qualification.

SCOTLAND

Child Abuse

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were convicted for offences related to the sexual abuse of children in the years 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Lang: The age of the victims of crimes and offences is not included in the statistics on court proceedings collected by the Scottish Home and Health Department. However, two of the categories in the classification of crimes and offences used in the statistics relate specifically to some form of sexual abuse of children. Figures for these categories are given in the table.

Persons with charge proved Scotland

Her Majesty's Inspectorate

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide details, in respect of Her Majesty's inspectorate in Scotland, of the average age of inspectors, the number of men and women, the average age of actual retirement, how many have received some form of award for redundancy, or premature retirement or sickness, the average amount of these awards, the size of the inspectorate by years since the Rayner report and the current pay scales.

Mr. Rifkind: The information sought on Her Majesty's schools inspectorate is as follows:

1. the average age is 49;
2. there are 101 men and 12 women;
3. over a period of 10 years, a period for which information is readily available, the average age of retirement for all reasons has been 59; the average age of retirement on age grounds has been 61;
4. over the same period 12 inspectors received premature or medical retirement awards;
5. the average amount of these 12 awards at the date of retirement was:
   retirement pension, £7,830 retirement lump sum, £17,517 compensation lump sum (when applicable) £6,576

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if a teacher or lecturer is entitled to have a colleague, or professional or trade union representative present when interviewed by one of Her Majesty's inspectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: There is no entitlement for a teacher or lecturer to have a colleague, or professional or trade union representative present when being interviewed by one of Her Majesty's inspectors.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if a teacher or lecturer, who receives an apparently unfair or potentially damaging comment from one of Her Majesty's inspectors, can require that this comment be either given in writing or withdrawn in writing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: There is no entitlement for a teacher or lecturer to be given in writing comments of one of Her Majesty's inspectors. It is open to anyone who believes they have been unfairly treated in the course of Her Majesty's inspectors' discharge of their duties to make representations to my right hon. and learned Friend or, in the last resort, to pursue complaints through the courts.

Road Safety

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many employees in each region of Scotland are funded by the Manpower Services Commission community programme for the Scottish traffic education programme; and whether this road safety project is confined to 14 to 18-year-olds throughout.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The current number of approved and filled places, by employment and enterprise group area, which are funded by the Manpower Services Commission community programme for the Scottish traffic education programme are as shown in the table. This road safety project is indeed directed at 14 to 18-year-olds.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the in-patient waiting list at 31 December for each year since 1970, for each area health board.

Mr. John MacKay: Health boards were established in April 1974, and information on waiting lists in board areas for 1970-73 could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

The figures for subsequent years at 30 September are set out in the table:

Radioactive Discharges

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list showing for each licensed nuclear site the calculated critical group exposures associated with (a) actual radioactive discharges in the last year and (b) 100 per cent. of authorised discharges calculated either on the basis of numerical limits given in the authorisation or on the basis of the maximum possible discharges where numerical limits do not apply.

Mr. Ancram: Assessments of critical group exposure for each site are published by the Scottish Development Department in statistical bulletins which are placed in the Library. Bulletin No. 4/1984 contains results up to the end of 1983. The results for 1984 and 1985 will be published shortly.

All nuclear site authorisations are being reviewed over a three-year period and the new certificates being issued will impose numerical limits on the quantities of radioactivity discharged. As part of the public consultations in connection with this review, estimates will be provided of the level of exposure which would arise from discharging radionuclides up to the limits proposed.

Homes Insulation Grants

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any local authorities in Scotland have expended their allocations of the 1986-87 homes insulation grants scheme.

Mr. Ancram: Yes; 18 local authorities have now expended the allocations made to them in April 1986. Further allocations will very shortly be made to those authorities which have requested them.

Tree Planting (Consultations)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will alter the practice under which the Nature Conservancy Council is consulted only if planting of trees is proposed on a national nature reserve or a site of special interest;

(2) if he will alter the practice under which the Countryside Commission is consulted only if the planting of trees is proposed on a national scenic area.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission's procedures for consulting the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission for Scotland on forestry proposals are based on mutually agreed arrangements. These are kept under review and adjustments made from time to time.

Fishing Industry

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the total allowable catches and quotas for 1987 discussed at the meetings of the European Council of Fisheries Ministers on 17 and 18 December.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw). Overall, I am confident that we have secured a good balance between the requirements of the industry and the need to conserve stocks for the future.

Detained Persons (Deaths)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cell deaths involving persons held in police custody have occurred in each of the past five years.

Mr. Lang: The figures for the last five complete years are as follows:

	Number
1981	4
1982	1
1983	2
1984	4
1985	3

Information about each of these deaths is given in the annual reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary for Scotland.

Cumbernauld (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when next he expects to visit Cumbernauld new town.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend visited Cumbernauld on 20 October this year when he opened Seaboard Lloyd's new factory in the town. He has no immediate plans for a further visit. However, I plan to visit Cumbernauld on 27 March next year.

Crash Barriers

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans exist to provide dual carriageway trunk roads in Scotland with central reservation crash barriers.

Mr. Ancram: Central reserve barriers will continue to be provided on dual carriageway trunk roads where they can be justified. The whole length of the A74 from Millbank to the border is being provided with barriers, and the need for their installation on other roads is being reviewed, taking account of traffic volumes and the incidence of cross-over accidents.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of dual carriageway trunk roads in Scotland have central reservation crash barriers.

Mr. Ancram: Forty-eight miles (18 per cent.) of the 265 miles of dual carriageway trunk road in Scotland have central reserve barriers.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans exist to provide central reservation crash barriers on all of Scotland's motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: All new trunk motorways with a central reserve of up to 10 m. width will be constructed with central reserve barriers. Such barriers will be installed on existing trunk motorways where they can be justified.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the Scottish motorway network includes central reservation crash barriers.

Mr. Ancram: Thirty-six miles (25 per cent.) of the 144 miles of motorway for which my right hon. and learned Friend is responsible have central reserve barriers. I do not hold information on the Glasgow urban section of the M8 which is the responsibility of Strathclyde regional council.

Health Service Managers

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce performance bonuses for senior health service managers; how such bonuses will be determined; what is the range of payments intended; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The Scottish Home and Health Department is consulting Scottish health boards and the Common Services Agency on proposals for personal performance review and a performance-related pay scheme for general managers in the National Health Service in Scotland. The proposed scheme contains the main features of the scheme for performance pay which has been in operation in England since September. These include annual performance review measured against objectives previously agreed with the health authority.

I shall inform the House when the scheme is introduced and details will be placed in the Library.

Unisys (Plant Closure)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with Unisys, Burroughs Machines Ltd., concerning the proposed closure of its plant in Cumbernauld new town; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Officials of the Industry Department for Scotland have been in contact with company representatives in the United Kingdom and Detroit throughout the last 10 months. Regrettably, Unisys found itself unable to accept our latest offer of regional assistance. I have made if clear that the Department remains ready to provide whatever help it properly can for any proposals aimed at securing jobs at the plant.

Earnings

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average male rate of pay, expressed as an annual figure, for each travel-to-work area in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available for the areas requested. Estimates of average gross weekly earnings are available only for the larger Scottish regions, and for Scotland as a whole. These are published each year in the tables of the "New Earnings Survey", parts A and E, available in the Library of the House.

Strathclyde Police (Women Officers)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Strathclyde as to the number of women police officers, the ranks they hold, and the proportion of each rank above sergeant representing women officers in the Strathclyde police force.

Mr. Lang: No. Information about the numbers of (a) police officers and (b) female police officers on the strength of Strathclyde police as at 31 December 1985, detailed in each case by rank, was given in the chief constable's report for 1985.

Private Nursing Homes

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current provision of private nursing homes for the elderly in Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. John MacKay: Arrangements for the registration and inspection of private nursing homes are the responsibility of the local health board, to which detailed questions on the type of provision offered should be directed.

Schools (Corporal Punishment)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils fall under section 48(5)(b) of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 concerning corporal punishment in schools.

Mr. John MacKay: In Scotland, some 400 pupils are likely to be affected.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to make an order under section 48(8) of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986, concerning corporal punishment in schools.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to make regulations under section 48(8) simultaneously with the making of the commencement order for that section.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils fall under sections 48(6)(a), 48(6)(b) and 48(6)(c) of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 concerning corporal punishment; and how many schools have one or more pupils who are covered by these categories.

Mr. John MacKay: It is likely that some 2,600 pupils and some 30 pupils will come within the terms of section 48(6)(a) and 48(6)(b), respectively. No information is centrally available as to the numbers of pupils who will fall within the scope of Section 48(6)(c).

Torness Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian on 26 November, Official Report, column 274, if he will publish the exercise scenario used at Torness power station on 18 September; if he will describe each accident or fault said to have occurred for exercise purposes; whether any fire or explosion was said to have occurred for exercise purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 304]: It is not the practice to publish the detailed scenarios prepared by the SSEB for the annual exercising of emergency plans at each nuclear power station. These scenarios are submitted to Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate for acceptance and incorporate a wide variety of accident conditions relevant to the type of reactor and those aspects of the emergency arrangements which are to be demonstrated. Typically the scenarios can incorporate pressure circuit failure, fires, release of radioactive material and injury to personnel. Copies of the scenarios are provided in advance to representatives of the emergency services which are involved and a report on the emergency exercise is made to the local liaison committee. The scenario for the exercise at Torness on 18 September 1986 provided for a simulated depressurisation accident from a reactor.

DEFENCE

Cyprus

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many prosecutions in the sovereign base areas of Akrotiri and Dhekelia have been made against motorists without motor insurance or insurance by a company not recognised by the administrator in the most convenient period for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: During the past five years the number of prosecutions in the court of the sovereign base areas for driving without insurance has been as follows:

	Number
1982	77
1983	70
1984	76
1985	84
1986	56

These figures include prosecutions of motorists insured by companies not recognised by the SBA administrator.

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance is issued by the authorities of the sovereign base areas of Akrotiri and Dhekelia in Cyprus to individuals or companies resident in or visiting the base concerning the legal jurisdiction of the sovereign base areas.

Mr. Freeman: I shall reply shortly.

Defence Procurement

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to improve the value for money from defence procurement contracts by changing payment arrangements.

Mr. Younger: During this year, we have introduced a new approach to payment terms for defence contractors which aims to increase the incentive on firms to deliver goods on time and to the required specification with penalties for those who fall down on the job. Increasingly we will be moving away from terms which allowed contractors to be funded for all their costs, within the limits of the contract, with payments related to date rather than specific progress made.

One result, at least in the short term, will be greater uncertainty over the timing of our payments to contractors. With the consent of the Treasury, arrangements are being introduced for a three-year period so that if, as a result of the new approach to payment terms, provision for procurement expenditure is underspent by more than the 5 per cent. limit of the existing end year flexibility scheme, up to an additional £400 million can be carried forward into the following year. This will be met, in the normal way, from the reserve within the public expenditure planning total for the year and will not increase overall defence expenditure taking one year with another. The new payment arrangements, coupled with the greater margin of flexibility, should help us to get better value for the money we spend, to the benefit of our defence effort.

Devonport Dockyard

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announement on the future of Devonport dockyard.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Negotiations are still continuing with the three bidders for the contract to manage Devonport dockyard. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State does not, therefore, expect to be able to announce the preferred contractor for Devonport until early in the new year. My right hon. Friend will consult the trades unions on this before taking a final decision about the future management of Devonport dockyard.

Tucano Aircraft

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many flying hours the Tucano has now completed with the new Garrett engine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: About 100.

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the first Tucano to be handed over to the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 8 December 1986 at column 88.

Goalkeeper and Sea Wolf Missiles

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects each of the United Kingdom's three aircraft carriers to be fitted with Goalkeeper and Sea Wolf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We plan to fit Goalkeeper on the vessels described from 1987 as part of scheduled refit work. No decision has yet been made on the possibility of fitting Sea Wolf on the aircraft carriers.

PC9 Trainer Aircraft

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his officials attended the rolling out of the PC9 trainer aircraft at Brough on 15 December.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Six.

Sellafield (Processing)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the safety modifications for the Sellafield nuclear plant recommended by the nuclear installations inspectorate will have any effect on the capability of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. at Sellafield to ensure the processing of nuclear material for the United Kingdom nuclear weapons programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This is difficult to judge at present as the report by the nuclear installations inspectorate has only just been published. However, I should expect BNFL, after studying the report, to notify the Ministry of Defence if any of the activities, which it carries out for us, were likely to be affected.

Royal Marine Corps

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether serving members of the Royal Marine Corps are permitted to undertake paid work for companies or persons outside the corps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Service personnel are permitted to undertake paid work for companies or other private employment subject to certain restrictions.

Each application is given individual attention and approval is dependent on a number of criteria being met. It is important, for instance, that the applicant's additional employment should not interfere with his service duties and that there is no conflict of interest between the needs of the service and the commercial interests of the employer. Particular care is taken to ensure that the company or employer concerned has no contractual or other special relationship with the Ministry of Defence.

Airborne Early Warning System

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any representations from employees of interested contractors or subcontractors living in the Welwyn Hatfield constituency regarding the choice of airborne early warning system for the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have received a number of such representations including some from my hon. Friend's constituents.

Privatisation

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what were the original estimates for savings to be made for putting out to contract all those services on his Department's list for privatisation; and what have been the actual savings.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Savings in respect of defence services which have been contracted out since 1979 are estimated at some £30 million per annum.

DROPS

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if those responsible for the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system selection in 1983 included any officers with previous experience of the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system trials and development work carried out by his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how the mechanical efficiency of the Boughton demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system equipment criticised by his Department for its higher hydraulic pressures compared with that of other systems selected in preference to it; and if he will make a statement;

(3) to what factors he attributes the failure of the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system procurement to meet its in-service date; what effect the non-involvement of his Department's demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system experts in the assessment of proposals had in this regard; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if his Department's team of demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system experts making the 1983 selection were aware of the conclusions of project 226 regarding the use of trailers to provide the low mobility demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system function; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what changes have been made to the equipment specifications proposed in 1982 by the successful demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system competitors; to what extent those changes introduce any features proposed and costed in Boughton's production cost estimates but not costed in the selected competitors' original estimates; and if he will make a statement;

(6) if the prices and production cost estimates put forward by Foden and by Scammell in respect of their 1982 demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system equipment proposals were the subject of disclaimers and caveats; if Boughton's prices or production cost estimates were accompanied by any such disclaimers; and if he will make a statement;

(7) what specifications formed the basis of the production cost estimates of the successful demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system contenders in 1983 in comparison with those which were the subject of Boughton's production cost estimates; and if he will make a statement;

(8) how the specification for the MMLC demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system equipments proposed by (a) Foden and (b) Scammell in the 1982 demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system feasibility study response compared with those for the MMLC demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system equipments proposed by Boughtons in respect of the engine power, transmission and all features including the number of wheels and axles; and if he will make a statement;

(9) how the price put forward in 1982 by Scammell in respect of Boughtons' demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system load handling systems compared with the price put forward by Scammell for Multilift's flat flatrack load handling system, for Multilift's A-frame flatrack load handling system and for Powell Duffryn's A-frame flatrack load handling system; and if he will make a statement;

(10) when the requirement that the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system requirement that the vehicle be able to transmit power to the wheels at the same time as operating the hydraulic load handling system a live hydraulic facility was first formally recognised by his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(11) if, at the time in 1984 when he gave as a reason for the non-selection of the Boughtons' demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system equipment that it lacked power to lift the load of 14 tonnes required by the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system statement of requirement, he was aware of the United States Army trial reports stating that the Boughton equipment had regularly picked up 16½ tonnes without difficulty in the worst of conditions; and if he will make a statement;

(12) what was his Department's assessment after Boughtons proposed the inclusion of live hydraulics in its 1982 demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system submission, of the role of live hydraulics as a deciding factor in the ability of the demountable rack off-loading system to pick up loads sunk in mud; and if he will make a statement;

(13) what his Department has told Boughtons about the implications of live hydraulics for the cost of demountable rack off-loading and pick-up systems; whether the prices and production cost estimates of any competitive equipments proposed in 1982 without live hydraulics were adjusted for this and other increases in the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system specification before the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system selection team compared these prices and production cost estimates without Boughtons' submissions; and if he will make a statement;

(14) what criticisms his Department made of Boughtons' proposed demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system regarding the hydraulic pressure at which it worked; and if he will make a statement;

(15) if, in the 1982 statement of requirements for the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system any requirement was stated indicating either a maximum acceptable hydraulic pressure or a preference for low hydraulic pressures; and if he will make a statement;

(16) if he is satisfied that his Department's demountable rack off-loading pick-up system team of experts in 1983 understood the nature of all the offers submitted to them; that they were able to reconcile their drawings, their performance calculations and their written statements; and if he will make a statement;

(17) what engine power was called for in the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system 1982 statement of requirement; whether Boughtons met that requirement in respect of both its IMMLC and MMLC proposals; and if he will make a statement;

(18) if the equipment (a) as proposed in 1982 and (b) as built in 1984 by Fodens and Scammels met the stated minimum power requirements for demountable rack off-loading pick-up system IMMLC and MMLC vehicles contained in the 1982 stated req uirements; and if he will make a statement;

(19) what figure has been determined as the minimum power-to-weight requirement for the low mobility trailer combination of demountable rack off-loading pick-up system to comply with the United Kingdom or Federal German legislation or army mobility requirements; and if he will make a statement;

(20) when Boughtons first proposed that the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system vehicle should have live hydraulics; what proposals were made regarding this facility by Fodens, Scammell and Multilift in their 1982 demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system submissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I shall answer shortly.

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what evidence he has that British military technology related to the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system project is being passed to the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what evidence he has that the parent company of Multilift, recently awarded the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system contract, Partek of Finland has engaged in work for the military forces of the Soviet Union or any of its Warsaw pact allies; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what evidence he has that the parent company of Multilift, recently awarded the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system contract, Partek of Finland has any connection with the Russian civilian truck industry; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what was the value of the production order for the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system programme;

(5) how many firms were shortlisted for competitive trialling of the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system;

(6) what representations he has received from the company, Hearncrest Boughton in connection with allegations concerning intellectual property of the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system project;

(7) what steps he plans to take to ensure that the technology of the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system contract is safeguarded for use by the United Kingdom and her allies;

(8) when invitations were first issued for proposals to supply a combined vehicle and load handling system (DROPS);

(9) if his Department retains any copyright to the Multilift mark IV demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system; and if he will make a statement;

(10) if he will describe the export licensing controls to which the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system contract awarded to Multilift, Shrewsbury will be subject; and if he will make a statement;

(11) if the Comptroller and Auditor General has informed him when he expects to complete his investigation into the awarding of the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system project; and if he will make a statement;

(12) how his Department defines a defence product for the purposes of export control and security classification; and if the Multilift mark IV demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system falls within that definition.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I shall answer shortly.

SOCIAL SERVICES

AIDS

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice his Department is currently issuing about the implications for the spread of acquired immune deficiency syndrome of the practice known as French kissing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The AIDS virus (HIV) has been found in low density in saliva so there is a remote theoretical risk that transfer of saliva in French kissing, especially where the uninfected partner has a cut or sore in the mouth, could lead to transmission of the virus. But there is no evidence that the infection has ever been spread in this way. Our current advice is therefore that people need not worry about catching the infection from kissing.

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why official advertising on the dangers of acquired immune deficiency syndrom has not been extended to the regional press.

Mr. Newton: The first stage of the Department's advertising campaign has, of necessity, used the national media. As the campaign develops in the new year, an important role for both regional and local newspapers is envisaged.

Convalescent Hospitals

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of beds currently available for short-stay National Health Service patients in convalescent hospitals.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend the information he seeks in precisely the form requested. The available information is given in the table.

Convalescent beds, 1985
England

	Average daily number of available beds	Average daily number of occupied beds
National Health Service hospitals	205·5	139·7
Institutions providing treatment under contractual arrangements	[1]—	255·4

[1] Contractual arrangements are made as and when required.

Orthopaedic Surgery

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people, by region, are waiting for elective orthopaedic surgery; and what percentage have been waiting more than a year.

Mr. Newton: The latest information available centrally relates to the numbers of cases awaiting admission to National Health Service traumatic and orthopaedic departments and is included in a bound volume of the hospital in-patient waiting lists for health authorities in England at 31 March 1986, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Generic Prescribing

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his policy on compulsory generic prescribing or substitution for general practitioners;

(2) if he will estimate the effect of compulsory generic substitution on research-based pharmaceutical companies and the estimated public expenditure saving.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to introduce compulsory generic substitution nor to extend the present arrangements for generic prescribing by general practitioners. Under the selected list scheme some drugs must be prescribed generically. For drugs not covered by the selected list scheme we encourage doctors voluntarily to prescribe by generic name and we shall continue to do so.

The effect of compulsory generic substitution on research-based pharmaceutical companies and on public expenditure would depend on the details of whatever scheme was considered.

Selected List Prescribing

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy on the addition of new categories of drugs to the selected list.

Mr. Newton: The Government's policy remans unchanged. We have no present plans to extend the selected list scheme into other categories of drugs.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the annual saving from the introduction of a limited list of certain ranges of drugs; and how this saving is broken down by therapeutic component.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Solihull (Mr. Taylor) on 18 December. Full year data are not yet availale on which to calculate a breakdown of savings by therapeutic category.

Nursing Services, London

Mr Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the National Health Service management board's study of the nursing services in London to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The team studying the nursing services in London is aiming to complete its study and report to the National Health Service management board by late spring 1987. The board will then consider what local or national action may be required to remedy any problems revealed.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of hospital beds in the Wandsworth health authority area on 30 November 1976 and the number on 30 November 1986.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks in precisely the form requested. During 1985, the latest year for which information is available centrally, the average daily number of available beds in NHS hospitals in Wandsworth health authority was 2,337·5. The corresponding figure for 1976 was 3,126·6. Between 1976 and 1985 the number of in-patient cases treated per available bed increased from 15·4 to 18·7.

Family Planning Clinics

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what were the number of patients, and as proportions of women, under 20 years of age attending National Health Service family planning clinics in England in each of the years 1983, 1984 and 1985, in each of the following age-groups (a) under 16 years, (b) 16-17 years, (c) 18 years, (d) 19 years and (e) under 20 years;

(2) what were the numbers of patients, and as proportions of women, attending National Health Service family planning clinics in England in each quarter year since January 1983, in each of the following age-groups (a) under 16 years, (b) 16 years, (c) 17 years, (d) 18 years, (e) 19 years, (f) under 20 years and (g) 20 to 24 years.

Mr. Newton: The available information is given in the following table. Quarterly information is not collected centrally.

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will improve the structure of nurses' pay sufficiently to attract an adequate number of young nurses into the profession.

Mr. Newton: The pay of all grades of nursing and midwifery staff is decided in the light of the recommendations of the independent review body for nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine. Since 1984 nurses have received an increase of over 11 per cent. in real terms. I understand that the review body has begun taking evidence for the 1987-88 pay round.

Meanwhile the management and staff sides of the nursing and mid-wifery staffs negotiating council are engaged in a review of the grading structure for clinical nurses and midwives, the results of which will in due course be reported to the review body for pricing.

"Breaking the Sound Barrier" (Exhibition)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Royal National Institute for the Deaf's campaign, "Breaking the Sound Barrier," to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Major: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 30 March 1987 to 3 April 1987.

Adult Dental Health

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans for a national survey of adult dental health in 1988 as a follow-up to the surveys carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in 1968 and 1978.

Mrs. Currie: The 1988 survey of adult dental health is one of a number of proposals under consideration by the research committee of the Department.

Wandsworth Health Authority

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of beds occupied by private patients in National Health Service hospitals in the Wandsworth health authority area on 1 December.

Mrs. Currie: For the latest information available centrally, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) today. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Wandsworth district health authority for the more recent information he seeks.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the total value of contracts provided by private contractors in the Wandsworth health authority area on 1 December:

(2) if he will list, as of 1 December, the type of work being provided by private contractors in the Wandsworth health authority area.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Wandsworth district health authority for this information.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Asbestos

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what records are kept as to the number of people working in power stations in the United Kingdom who have come into contact with asbestos and are now suffering from (a) asbestosis or (b) bilateral diffuse pleural thickening; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Records are not kept in this form. The Department records awards of disablement benefit to people suffering from pneumoconiosis (which includes asbestosis) and bilateral diffuse pleural thickening as a result of occupational exposure to asbestos. However, the number of such awards to people working in power stations is not separately identified.

Since December 1985 the number of people seen by special medical boards in connection with claims for asbestosis and bilateral diffuse pleural thickening who have worked in power stations or have been otherwise employed by the Central Electricity Generating Board has been recorded.

Heating Costs (Single Payments)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payments in respect of additional heating expenditure incurred during last winter were made in the Tooting constituency; and what was the total cost and average value of each payment.

Mr. Lyell: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The parliamentary constituency of Tooting is dealt with by three local offices which also cover parts of other constituencies. The information requested is as follows:

Local office	Total number of payments	Total amount paid £	Average payment £
Balham	773	11,075	14·33
Streatham	498	8,878	17·83
Wandsworth	541	12,507	23·12

Computerised Hospital Waiting Lists (West Midlands)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the present position regarding the pilot scheme by the west midlands regional health authority on computerised hospital waiting lists.

Mr. Newton: The project is under way. Since July the selected group of general practitioners has received monthly bulletins containing detailed information on in-patient and out-patient waiting times for general surgery in the region. Referrals from those general practitioners are being monitored.

In-Patients (No Smoking Areas)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision is currently available for patients in long-stay hospitals who wish to reside in a smoke-free environment.

Mrs. Currie: The Department issued guidance (in circular HC(85)22) to health authorities on promoting non-smoking on National Health Service premises. The general principle should be to discourage smoking as far as possible. In long- stay accommodation, however, which in many cases is the patients' home, greater flexibility may be necessary. Nevertheless, where smoking is permitted, it should be restricted to separate areas where it will not distress patients who are non-smokers.

Dentures

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average cost (a) to the National Health Service, and (b) to the patient for repairs to dentures, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: The average cost of repairs to dentures in the general dental service in England in 1985 was £7. Repairs to dentures are free of charge to all patients.

National Assistance Act 1948

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans to seek to remove the word "dumb" from section 29(1) of the National Assistance Act 1948.

Mr. Major: The term "dumb" is no longer acceptable and is not used by the professions dealing with people with communcation handicaps. If a suitable legislative opportunity arose, we would consider amending section 29(1) of the National Assistance Act 1948 accordingly, although we can give no undertaking as to when that might be.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which hospitals in London are currently being considered for closure.

Mr. Newton: In London (the former GLC area) there are three hospitals whose total permanent closure and where relevant relocation of services, is either under formal public consultation or where the consultation procedure has been completed but no final decision has yet been taken.

The hospitals are the west London hospital and the Westminster children's hospital in Riverside health authority and St. James' hospital in Wandsworth. My right hon. Friend has today agreed the closure of New Cross hospital in Lewisham and north Southwark, in association with approval in principal for a £35 million new development at Guy's hospital.

Hospital Building Maintenance

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, pursuant to his answer of Friday 5 December, Official Report, column 819, expenditure on hospital building maintenance is sub-divided in any way in the health authority's accounts.

Mrs. Currie: No. The annual accounts of health authorities show only the total expenditure on building maintenance under each main service heading (hospital services, community health services, ambulance services, etc.). However, in addition to this functional analysis the accounts include a subjective analysis by type of expenditure. This provides an alternative breakdown of health authorities' total revenue expenditure of which some categories relate directly to building maintenance — for example 'salaries and wages — building trade operatives' — building maintenance — equipment and materials' and building maintenance — external contracts'. The Department's annual booklets "Health Authorities' Annual Accounts — National Summary (England)" show all the figures for both analyses. Copies of the booklets for the years up to 1984-85 are held in the Library and that for 1985-86 will be placed there as soon as it is available.

Hospital Accommodation

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he has given to health authorities as to the security of housing tenure for staff who have worked and lived in hospital accommodation but have not been employed by the company now contracted to do certain hospital services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The National Health Service management board is currently reviewing the condition under which staff and others occupy health authority accommodation. In the meantime, health authorities have been advised that no one is to be given notice to quit without the prior approval of the Department.

Health Education Council

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what redundancy payments are being made to staff at the Health Education Council.

Mr. Newton: Most members of staff will be offered the opportunity of transferring to the new authority with full continuity of employment. The Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 provides that redundancy payments are not payable in such cases. The statutory entitlements of any members of staff who do not take up appointment with the new body will be met.

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when appointments will be made to the special health authority which is to replace the Health Education Council.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend hopes to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Benefits (Girocheques)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in the past three years girocheques issued by the Livingston computer centre to Scottish claimants have been delivered late; what information he has as to the cause of late delivery in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: In the last three years there have been six incidents of delay to Scottish claimants attributable to the computer centre. On 28 February 1984 industrial action meant that giros for that day were dispatched a day late. In November 1984 a batch of 6,000 giros were delayed by a day; 800 giros were similarly delayed on 16 January 1986. On both occasions delay was caused by dispatch errors.

In January 1986 an unprecendented fault occurred in the system. In this instance local unemployment benefit offices were forewarned and those offices took steps to minimise the impact on claimants. Similar faults occurred on 15 July 1986 and 2 October 1986. Other instances of non-delivery were outside the control of the computer centre.

Detailed figures for Scotland are available only for the past year up to October 1986, as follows:

	Number of Giros delivered late in Scotland	Causes Adverse Weather	Rail Delay	Industrial Action en Route	Problems of delivery by Post Office	Other
November 1985	743	3	—	—	10	—

October 1986	705	—	—	—	14	—

Figures for the previous two years covering the whole of the distribution area from Livingston show a similar pattern.

Additionally a bag of mail for Edinburgh which left Livingston at 2.30 pm on Friday 12 December and arrived in Edinburgh by Saturday morning was not delivered until Monday. Local office and social services staff made emergency payments and I am most grateful to them for their patience and co-operation.

Problems are inevitable in an undertaking of this magnitude. When any fault does occur all effort is then directed towards minimising the impact on claimants.

Mr. Joe Dixon

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether Mr. Joe Dixon of Oldbury, Carrigaline, County Cork, Eire, has been awarded a war disablement pension; what progress has been made regarding his claim first made on 21 November 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Mr. Dixon was advised on 2 December that he had been awarded a war disablement pension.

Medicine (Vocational Training)

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations have been received from the European Community regarding powers exercised by his Department to restrict entry to vocational training in medical general practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: None. The arrangements for entry to vocational training for general practice meet the requirements of the European Community directive on training in general practice.

Fluoridation

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to issue the draft guidelines on the fluoridation of water supplies.

Mrs. Currie: A draft circular giving guidance to health authorities on the implementation of fluoridation schemes and also containing a model agreement between health authorities and water undertakers and an indemnity from the Secretary of State to water undertakers will be issued to regional health authorities for consultation in January.

Hypothermia

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of deaths of babies in the first year of life as a result of hypothermia, whether as a primary or contributory factor, in each month since January 1979.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows the numbers of deaths with mention of hypothermia on the death certificate, irrespective of whether it did or did not appear as the underlying cause of death, for persons aged under one year by month of registration for England and Wales from January 1979 to the latest available month.

WHO (Nutrition)

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has contributed to the preparation by the European regional office of the World Health Organisation of a paper entitled "Healthy Nutrition: Preventing Nutrition-Related Diseases in Europe"; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Department was not involved in preparing this paper. I understand that the World Health Organisation is considering publishing it in 1987.

"Personal Social Services"

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish his Green Paper on "Personal Social Services".

Mr. Fowler: The timing of the publication of the document has been reviewed in the light of its interaction with the overview of community care which Sir Roy Griffiths has been asked to undertake and which I announced earlier this week. The consultative document will now be published early in the new year.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, for the most recent years for which figures are available, the numbers of (i) singleton, (ii) two and (iii) other multiple births which took place following (a) in vitro fertilisation and (b) treatment for infertility, and in each case how many of the babies (x) were still-born, (y) died under the age of one year and (z) died at ages one to four years.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Pregnancy (Research)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on research into the outcome of pregnancy following infertility treatment and in vitro fertilisation, including problems associated with neo-natal care for such babies born in a multiple birth.

Mrs. Currie: We are aware of two research projects currently in progress. The Medical Research Council is organising a follow-up study of children born as a result of in vitro fertilisation (IVF). The national perinatal epidemiology unit and the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys are jointly carrying out a study of triplet and higher order births in 1979-80 and 1982-84. This study will investigate both the extent to which multiple births in these years arose from in vitro fetilisation and drugs used to treat infertility, and neo-natal care for babies born in multiple births.

Adjudication and Overpayments Regulations

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to make new adjudication and overpayments regulations.

Mr. Lyell: I have on 17 December laid the Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations 1986 and the Social Security (Payments on Account, Overpayments and Recovery) Regulations 1986, which are consequent on the Social Security Act 1986. The regulations will come into effect on 6 April 1987, and continue the process of applying common provisions to the administration of social security benefits. The changes will make it easier for claims for social security benefits to be dealt with more quickly and more accurately.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Ashby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the revaluation provisions relating to the deferred pensions of early leavers from occupational pension schemes will take effect.

Mr. Major: The revaluation provisions contained in the Social Security Act, 1985 apply to early leavers after 1 January 1986 with at least a year to go before the normal scheme pension age.

An order laid on 9 December (S.I. 1986, No. 2070) specified that for pensions which are subject to revaluation and which come into payment in the year beginning 1 January 1987, the revaluation percentage shall be 3 per cent. This is in line with the rise in prices in Great Britain in the year ended 30 September 1986.

Guy's Hospital (Development)

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is yet in a position to make a statement about the proposed new development at Guy's hospital, London.

Mr. Fowler: I have today given approval in principle to a £35 million new development at Guy's hospital, London. The scheme is due to start in 1990 and should be completed by 1994. This is an imaginative and exciting development and I welcome the joint efforts of both Government and voluntary sources which have combined to make it possible.

One of the Government's priorities for the National Health Service is the continuing development and modernisation of hospitals enabling us to replace older facilities and re-shape services to meet health-care needs in an up-to-date way. The present plan to develop Guy's hospital is part of this process and will complete the rebuilding of this major teaching hospital. I am at the same time agreeing to the closure of New Cross hospital, and endorsing the South East Thames regional health authority's plans to provide an additional £300,000 capital and £500,000 a year of additional revenue from facilities to meet needs currently met at New Cross.

Major contributions have been made to the cost of the Guy's development from the Guy's hospital trustees and from the splendid generosity of Sir Philip and Lady Harris, as well as the University Grants Committee and the central funds of the DHSS.

With 275 beds and 90 day places the new development will provide the latest in medical and psychiatric care, bringing together vital out-patient and rehabilitation facilities, together with an accident and emergency department. A range of supporting departments, teaching and research facilities will enhance the hospital's existing services, ensuring the hospital's key role well into the next century.

The scheme advances the strategy of Lewisham and North Southwark health district to concentrate its acute beds on two district hospital sites; at Lewisham in the south of the district and at Guy's in the north. These hospitals, some five miles apart, are well placed geographically to serve the population of the whole district. When the new building is opened, patients will have improved access to a full range of diagnostic equipment and high technology services at Guy's. At present many acute services, particularly those for the elderly, are based where such facilities are not available.

The district's strategy also incorporates new developments at Lewisham hospital and in the community. With the Guy's building it will entail the closure of New Cross hospital in 1987. New Cross has become uneconomic to run and is not well fitted to provide the modern facilities now required.

I have considered with the regional health authority special measures to ensure that patients currently treated at New Cross will continue to receive the treatment they require while the new services are being built up at Guy's and elsewhere. Some general medical and geriatric patients will move to Guy's and Hither Green; rheumatology patients will transfer to Lewisham hospital; psychogeriatric services will go to Guy's or new developments at New Cross.

On top of this the RHA will provide £300,000 capital and guarantee £500,000 revenue spending per year to enable Lewisham and Southwark to open two 24-hour observation wards, day surgery units where minor operations can be carried out and to maintain the use of medical ward at Hither Green hospital. The RHA will draw on the £30 million special fund set up by the Government to help regions receiving less than average national growth to cope with the transitional problems of change.

The South East Thames RHA will keep the position under review.

(2) if he will give for 1985 for each district health authority, regional health authority, special health authority, board of governors and for England as a whole: (a) the number of pay beds, (b) their average occupancy by private patients, (c) the average private patient occupancy as a percentage and (d) the number of deaths and discharges of private in-patients.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 24 November 1986, c. 129-30]: The information requested is given in the tables.

Waiting Lists

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what response he has had from health authorities to his request for plans to reduce patient waiting lists and patient waiting time; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he proposes to issue a list of measures all health authorities can take to reduce waiting lists and waiting time; if further resources will be made available to enable the measures to be implemented; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if health authorities will be left to implement individual strategies to reduce patient waiting lists and waiting time; if extra resources will be made available to enable the strategies to be implemented; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he has received a report from the North East Thames regional health authority concerning methods of reducing waiting lists and waiting times for patients; what plans he has to put their recommendations into effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 531-32]: A checklist of possible ways to reduce waiting lists and times was issued to all health authorities earlier this year. North East Thames regional health authority, and all other regional health authorities, have submitted reports on their districts' plans to bring about such a reduction. Each region will now develop and implement these strategies in the light of comments which the Department has made on their reports. In addition to the increased resources for hospital and community health services generally which are being made available, my right hon. Friend has established a fund totalling £50 million over the two years 1987-89 from which health authorities who can show that they are using their general resources effectively will be able to bid for extra money for specific initiatives.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the findings of the inquiry into the application of the resource allocation working party in the Thames health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 532]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 2 December c. 615]: The information requested is in the table.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish a breakdown of the number of supplementary benefit claimants and dependents in 1984 broken down by social security region;

(2) if he will publish his latest figure for each regional area, and for the country as a whole, of the numbers claiming supplementary benefit and supplementary pension and his estimate of the numbers dependent on these claims.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his replies, 2 December 1986, c. 615 and 5 December 1986, c. 819]: The information requested is in the table.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current level of outstanding payment of housing benefit by the Department of Health and Social Security due to each housing authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1986, c. 731]: None. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Ross) on 21 November at column 392.

Hip Replacement

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of mental handicap hospitals in England which have closed down in each year since 1981; and if he will give a breakdown by region of these closures during the same period.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 16 December 1986 c. 466-67]: Information held centrally records hospitals for which closure has been approved. The actual date on which closure occurs is not recorded. Our information on mental handicap hospitals approved for complete closure since 1981 is as follows:

EMPLOYMENT

Jobclubs

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Paymaster General how many jobclubs have been established at jobcentres in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on what they have achieved in securing employment for the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Lee: On 3 December 1986, 303 jobclubs were open for business. In the period from 7 April 1986 to 7 November 1986, 9,372 people passed through jobclubs. Of these, 61 per cent. obtained jobs. A further 14 per cent. found temporary work on the community programme or took up a training place or the enterprise allowance scheme.

The success record of jobclubs is impressive and we have asked the Manpower Services Commission to expand the jobclub network to 1,000 by March 1987 and, if the need continues, to 2,000 by September 1987.

Departmental Achievement

Mr. Pawsey asked the Paymaster General if he will list the principal achievements of his Department since 1983.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I will publish the information in the Official Report as soon as possible.

Departmental Initiatives (Women)

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General if he will list those initiatives of his Department which have been of benefit to women, since 1979, the cost or estimated cost of those initiatives, and the proportion of the total budget of his Department this represents.

Mr. Lee: The main employment, training and enterprise measures offered by my Department and the Manpower Services Commission since 1979 are:

Special Temporary Employment Programme[1]
Community Enterprise Programme[1]
Youth Opportunities Programme[1]
Training Opportunities Scheme[1]
Short-time Working Compensation Scheme[1]
Temporary Employment Subsidy[1]
Small Firms Employment Subsidy[1]

Young Workers Scheme[1]
Temporary Short-time Working Compensation Scheme[1]
Part-time Job Release Scheme[1]
The Employment Transfer Scheme[1]
The Job Search Scheme[1]
Free Forward Fares Schemes[1]
Community Programme
Enterprise Allowance Scheme
Voluntary Projects Programme
Community Industry
YTS
Technical, Vocational and Educational Initiative
Job Release Scheme
Job Splitting Scheme
Restart Programme
Jobstart Allowance
New Workers Scheme
Training for Enterprise
Training Grants for Employers
Wider Opportunities Training Programme
Access to Information Technology
Job Training Scheme
Jobclubs
Travel to Interview Scheme
Open Tech Programme
Career Development Loans[2]
Loan Guarantee Scheme
Job Introduction Scheme
Adaptation to Premises and Equipment Scheme
Personal Reader Service
Special aids to employment
Assistance to fares for work for the disabled Skills—linked and Preparatory English as a second language (ESL) Courses Industrial Language Training

All of the measures are open to both women and men who satisfy the individual eligibility criteria for each scheme. Since 1979 the Government have spent in the region of £10 billion on these measures and are spending a further £3 billion this year. It is not possible to assess what proportion of the Department's expenditure on these initiatives is taken up by women.

In addition to training courses open to both men and women the MSC runs a number of single-sex courses, including JTS courses, for women and girls, in occupations where women are under-represented and single-sex courses for women wanting to return to work after time at home looking after families[3].

We have designated 172 training bodies to run training courses for women in non-traditional occupations or for women returning to work after a period of domestic responsibility. The Sex Discrimination Act 1986 freed training bodies from the need to obtain ministerial designation[3].

Since 1979 the following legislation of particular benefit to women has been passed[3]:

Equal Pay (Amendment) Regulations 1983.
Sex Discrimination Act 1986.

In London on 8 and 9 December 1986 the Government, in conjunction with the European Commission, sponsored a conference on women and training. This drew together practical experience from across Europe on training women for occupations where women are under-represented; training for the new technologies and for setting up small businesses (approximate cost to Department of Employment £12,500).

[1]This scheme is now closed.
[2]This is a pilot scheme which is running for a three-year period from April 1986 in Aberdeen, Bristol/Bath, Greater Manchester and Reading/Slough.
[3]The cost of these items is not readily available and cannot be provided without disproportionate expenses.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Paymaster General how many people (a) are, and (b) have been in jobclubs in the constituency of Brigg and Cleethorpes since 1983.

Mr. Lee: There are no jobclubs in the Brigg and Cleethorpes constituency. However, there are jobclubs in Grimsby and Scunthorpe. No separate records are kept of people attending these jobclubs from Brigg and Cleethorpes. The Grimsby jobclub opened on 7 July 1986; 87 people have joined since then, and 70 per cent. of leavers have gone into employment. At 5 December there were 24 people in the jobclub. The Scunthorpe jobclub opened on 13 January 1986; 185 people have joined since then, and 73 per cent. have gone into employment. At 5 December there were 37 people in the jobclub.

Restart Scheme

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General how many people who live in the London borough of Wandsworth have had their benefit terminated or suspended for failure to attend restart interviews.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No one can lose their benefit entitlement solely as a result of the restart programme. Under long-standing legal rules people can lose their entitlement to benefit if they fail to attend an interview, are not available for work or refuse an offer of suitable employment.

The information asked for is not available in the exact form requested as it is not possible to match precisely unemployment benefit office areas with the borough of Wandsworth boundary. Up to 13 November 1986, 126 people claiming unemployment benefit in the offices covering the London borough of Wandsworth had failed to attend a restart interview after two invitations and as a result had their benefit disallowed by independent adjudication officers. Subsequently 56 of them attended a restart interview and had their benefit reinstated.

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General what percentage of the people carrying out restart interviews have been through the full training programme for restart interviewers and counsellors.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In all but exceptional cases of unforeseen absence of trained staff, restart interviews are always carried out by fully trained counsellors.

Work Tests

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General how many people who live in the London borough of Wandsworth have had their benefit terminated or suspended as a result of interviews on the availability test.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information is not available in the form asked. Not all the unemployment benefit offices serving the Wandsworth area are yet operating the improved procedures to establish that new claimants are available for work and, therefore, entitled to unemployment benefits in accordance with long standing legal rules. They have so far been introduced at the Tooting B, Wimbledon and Fulham offices.

At 12 December, the latest date for which information is available, 107 claimants had their claims suspended and referred to the independent adjudicating authorities because of doubts about their availability for work. Of the 12 cases upon which the adjudicating officer has taken a decision, 10 have resulted in disallowance of benefit and two in the restoration of benefit.

Tooting B benefit office also took part in the experimental test of improved procedures to establish the availability for work of those existing claimants over the age of 50 years who attend the office quarterly, and I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 26 November at c. 255-56.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General how many people in Dundee have been interviewed under the availability for work test; and how many have had their benefits stopped as a result.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The improved procedures for testing the availability for work of new claimants using a revised questionnaire were introduced in the Dundee unemployment benefit offices during November. They have been applied to all new claimants at those offices but records are not kept of the numbers who have also been interviewed separately about their availability.

At 12 December, the latest date for which information is available, 23 claimants had had their claims suspended and referred to the independent adjudicating authorities because of doubts about their availability for work. To date, one of these claims has been disallowed, 13 allowed and nine are still under consideration by the adjudicating authorities.

YTS

Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General what ethnic breakdown he has of current YTS participants or of those who have recently left the scheme.

Mr. Trippier: The most recently available information on the ethnic group of YTS participants who entered under two-year YTS rules relates to trainees in training at 10 November 1986. The data are as follows:

	Number
Ethnic Group 1 (White)	319,797
Ethnic Group 2 (Black/African/Caribbean descent)	5,937
Ethnic Group 3 (Indian Sub-continent descent)	5,042
Ethnic Group 4 (None of these)	2,102
Ethnic Group 5 (Prefers not to say)	3,280
Total	336,158

The latest group of leavers from YTS for whom information is available are those who left one-year YTS training programmes between April and June 1986. Of the 82,820 leavers in this period, 79,140 were recorded as "white", 1,510 as of "black/African/Caribbean descent", 1,010 as of "Indian sub-continent descent" and 1,160 as "all others".

The number of ethnic group categories changed from four to five with the introduction of two-year YTS.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General how many of those out of work at the latest date for which figures are available (a) for more than one year, (b) for more than three years and (c) for more than five years (i) were married, (ii) have more than one child, (iii) have two children and (iv) are single parents of a child or children under the age of 16 years.

Mr. Lee: The available information which is from the labour force survey is set out in the table:

Number of people without a job and looking for work Great Britain, spring 1985

	Unemployed and seeking work for over 1 year Thousands	Unemployed and seeking work for over 3 years Thousands
(i) Married People	633	288

[1] Heads of family units and wives of heads of family units.
[2] Included in (ii).
[3] Included in (ii) and (iii).

Note:
No separate analysis is available of those unemployed more than five years.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing the number of additional (a) jobs in service industries, (b) jobs in banking, insurance and finance, (c) self-employed and (d) small business starts over stops, created in (i) Northern Ireland and (ii) the United Kingdom between June 1983 and June 1986.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1986, c. 539]: Information about job gains and losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employment at different dates.

Table 1 gives the net changes between June 1983 and June 1986 in the numbers of employees in employment in the industries specified, and in the numbers of self-employed, in Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom.

TABLE 1

The available information on numbers of businesses relates to the number registered for VAT and is given in table 2.

[1] Later estimates are not available for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing for Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom as a whole the number of persons at work who are (a) employees and (b) self-employed in June 1979, June 1983 and June 1986 or the latest month for which figures are available; and if he will estimate the number of second jobs included in these figures.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1986, c. 539]: The following tables give the numbers of employees in employment and self-employed at the dates and for the areas specified.

The second jobs included in the employees in employment estimates are not separately identified, but estimates from the labour force surveys suggest that the numbers of people with a second job as an employee in the United Kingdom in spring 1979 and spring 1983 were 247,000 and 382,000, respectively.

Estimates are not available for spring 1986. The survey sample is not large enough to give reliable estimates separately for Northern Ireland. The employment estimates do not include second jobs when they are held as self-employed.

Employment and Training Act 1973

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General if he will list the bodies established under section 10(2) of the Emploment and Training Act 1973; if he will name the person appointed to each body in accordance with the requirements of section 13 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 as amended by the 1973 Act; and which of those persons is a person with a disability.

Mr. Lee: I shall write to the right hon. Member and will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General how many jobs have been created within (a) the city of Leicester and (b) Leicester, East constituency since the introduction of the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Trippier: The enterprise allowance scheme is designed to help unemployed people who wish to set up in business but are deterred from doing so because they would lose their income from unemployment or supplementary benefit. The figures are not available in the form requested. Since the scheme was introduced nationally in August 1983 up to the 10 December 1986, 2,587 people have joined in the Leicester area which includes the city of Leicester. Recent survey information shows that 61 per cent. of those who take advantage of a full year's support under the scheme are still trading in their enterprise allowance scheme business three years after start-up. For every 100 self-employed people continuing in business at this stage, survey evidence indicates that 99 additional people have been taken on as employees.

Tobacco Industry

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Paymaster General if he will list the loss of jobs in the tabacco industry in the United Kingdom, by years, since 1979; and what is his estimate of the extent to which such losses are attributable to cheap imported cigarettes.

Mr. Lee: The estimated number of employees in employment in the tobacco industry in Great Britain are as follows:

Year June	Employees in Employment '000	Change on year '000
1979	31·0	—
1980	31·1	+0·1
1981	29·7	−1·4
1982	28·6	−1·1
1983	27·8	−0·8
1984	23·5	−4·3
1985	20·7	−2·8
1986	17·3	−3·4

These estimates are subject to considerable potential estimation error due to the relatively small number of employees in the industry. Estimates are not available for Northern Ireland.

There have been many factors influencing production methods and demand for tobacco goods over the period and it is not possible to say what proportion of job losses have been due to increased competition from abroad.

Job Training Scheme

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General whether early leavers from the new job training scheme will be liable to the 13 week benefit penalty.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given on 28 November at column 391 to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies).

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what instructions have been issued on the fees that job training scheme placement agencies may charge employers for use of the labour of trainees.

Mr. Trippier: The new pilot job training schemes provide individually tailored programmes of integrated training and practical experience for people who have been unemployed for more than six months. Managing agents arranging new job training scheme programmes are encouraged to charge the providers of practical experience and use the income generated to help meet the costs of training. There is no set charge, which is a matter for agreement between the managing agent and the practical experience provider.

Equal Treatment Directive

Mr. Hayward asked the Paymaster General what was the outcome of the consideration of the directive on equal treatment between men and women in self-employed occupations at the Council of Labour and Social Affairs Ministers on 11 December.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: At our meeting on 11 December the Council of Labour and Social Affairs Ministers adopted the directive on equal treatment between men and women in self-employed occupations. The main effect of the directive, in the form in which it was adopted, is to remove restrictions in some member states of the European Community, which may hinder women from taking up self-employed occupations. I do not expect the directive to have any significant effect in the United Kingdom where women do not face the legal obstacles to self-employment or employment by their husbands which they face in some other member states.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Paymaster General how many compliance cost assessments have been submitted by other Government Departments to his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to the reply, 2 December 1986, c. 576]: As of 20 November the total number of compliance cost assessments received for scrutiny by the enterprise and deregulation unit is 142; this includes assessments prepared by the Department of Employment.

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Paymaster General if it is his intention to publish the compliance cost assessments submitted by other Government Departments to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to the reply, 2 December 1986, c. 576]: The decision to publish a compliance cost assessment on a proposed regulation rests with the Minister responsible for that particular regulation. I have therefore consulted my colleagues about the principle.

In accordance with the Government's policy on the publication of information, future assessments will be made available subject to the need in particular cases to preserve the confidentiality necessary to the effective working of Government. They will be obtainable from individual Departments and will be included in public consultation documents, wherever possible. The enterprise and deregulation unit in my Department will monitor the overall position and be responsible for general inquiries for information.

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Paymaster General if he will state the terms of reference and composition of the enterprise and deregulation unit of his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to the reply, 2 December 1986, c. 576]: The enterprise and deregulation unit has a total of 23 staff (including secretarial and clerical support) made up of civil servants seconded from seven Government Departments anbd two accountants seconded from the private sector. The terms of reference of the unit were set out in annex 3 to the White Paper "Building Businesses . . . Not Barriers" (Cmnd. 9794) and are as follows:

The Enterprise and Deregulation Unit

The EDU comprises officials seconded from a variety of Departments. It will include a few staff from the private sector, whose experience of industrial and commercial management practices will provide help in assessing the level of burdens placed on business. The EDU will also be assisted by an advisory panel of individual business men. The director of the EDU reports to the Secretary of State for Employment and the Paymaster General.

The functions of the EDU will be:

(i) to provide Ministers with an overall picture of Government regulatory activity and its impact on business. The EDU will report on the progress of deregulation annually, to the Secretary of State for Employment and through him to the Prime Minister;

(ii) to "audit" Departments' systems of compliance cost assessment;

(iii) to provide Departments with expert help and guidance on the preparation of compliance cost assessments and on the establishment of systems to monitor the effect of regulation; to act as a central point for disseminating information on techniques involved in assessing the effect of regulations on business;

(iv) to examine the compliance cost assessment prepared by Departments. Initially, the EDU will examine all assessments. Once the system of periodic reports is established, then the EDU will use the reports to monitor progress and to pick out proposals in the pipeline for special attention. In practice, the EDU will work "by exception", looking at all the brief assessments but requiring full CCA's to be sent only in a minority of cases (eg those which it judges may raise particular difficulties for business). Assessments will, however, still need to be prepared, and should — unless otherwise agreed — continue to be submitted to DTI, where appropriate, and the relevant sponsor Departments. Where proposals in the pipeline are singled out for special attention, then the EDU will itself by involved in preparation of the compliance cost assessment from the start. In cases where there is disagreement at official level about the impact on business and desirability of a proposed regulation, then the issue will be referred to the Secretary of State for Employment and the other Ministers concerned, for resolution;

(v) to agree targets or objectives for each Department, subject to ministerial agreement;

(vi) to provide the main United Kingdom input into the European deregulation initiative (in consultation with FCO, DTI and the European secretariat in the Cabinet Office) and to act as a source of information on deregulatory work in other countries;

(vii) to undertake in conjunction with Departments, occasional reviews of particular areas of regulation which cut across Departmental responsibilities (eg licensing requirements).

Working Relationships

DTI will retain prime responsibility for representing the interests of business overall within Government. The EDU will liaise with DTI and will look to it for information and advice. It will also work closely with other sponsor Departments.

The EDU will work with the management and efficiency division in MPO on such aspects of deregulation as improved forms and the use of plain English; and with the central unit on purchasing on such aspects of deregulation which impact on the ability of firms to obtain Government business. It should also work with the training division in the Management and Personnel Office and the Civil Service College (to ensure that the appropriate messages about deregulation are taken on board by officials with responsibility for regulations). Close links with the efficiency unit and the Prime Minister's policy unit will be maintained.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Intervention Stores

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the number of new intervention stores built during the last 12 months, together with their cost, size and location in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other member countries of the EEC.

Mr. Gummer: No new Crown intervention stores have been built. Information about the building of new commercial stores which may or may not be used for intervention is not available. The United Kingdom Government do not have the information requested in respect of other member states of the European Community.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the foods, or wines, and the amounts, that are in intervention storage in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: A note setting out the volume of intervention stocks in the European Community as a whole and in the United Kingdom separately is deposited in the Library of the House and is updated monthly.

Purchase Prices (Indices)

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what form, in the annual review of agriculture 1987, he intends to revise the indices of purchase prices of the means of agricultural production.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have no plans to revise the form in which the indices of purchase prices of the means of agricultural production will be shown in the 1987 annual review White Paper.

Council of Fisheries Ministers

Sir Michael Shaw asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Council of Fisheries Ministers' meeting in Brussels on 17-18 December.

Mr. Gummer: Together with my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Scottish Office, I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the Council of Fisheries Ministers in Brussels on 17 and 18 December.

I am delighted to be able to report that at this, the fourth and last meeting of the Fisheries Council under the presidency of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, decisions were reached by qualified majority on the level of total allowable catches, quotas, guide prices and third country fishing arrangements for 1987. Once again, therefore, these arrangements were all settled before the year to which they apply. I am also glad to report that the final settlement on TACs and quotas secured virtually all of the United Kingdom's negotiating objectives as I outlined them in the debate in the House on 16 December.

In particular, agreement was reached on an important seasonal conservation measure requiring the use of a minimum mesh size of 100mm in an area adjoining the German and Dutch coasts. This area is larger than the closed area originally proposed by the Commission. This arrangement will apply in the first and last quarters of 1987 and will make an important contribution to protecting the juvenile cod. In the light of this measure the Commission will re-examine with Norway the level of TACs agreed for the white fish joint stocks. But, subject to any adjustments to which this may lead and to the review of the haddock TAC next year, which had already been provided for, the Council approved the reduced level of TACs agreed with Norway on the basis of the firm scientific advice.

The Council adopted increases in the TACs proposed by the Commission for a number of stocks of cod, haddock, sole, plaice, anglerfish, megrim, nephrops and pollack in areas VI and VII. These go a long way to making good the reductions in opportunities originally proposed and will be very welcome to our fishermen who would have been unduly restricted by the Commission's original proposals. For the very important sole and plaice stocks in areas VI and VII, the quotas for our fishermen for 1987 have been set at a level about 7 per cent. above that initially set for 1986.

On the pelagic fisheries, the Council increased the TAC for Western mackerel and restored part of the reductions originally proposed by the Commission on the TACs for west of Scotland and Irish Sea herring, while taking full account of the scientific advice. As a result the combined opportunities of herring and mackerel for United Kingdom fishermen for 1987 will be some 7 per cent. higher than those initially set for 1986. The Council approved the outcome of the Commission's negotiations with Norway, Sweden, Greenland and Canada on the fishing and other arrangements for 1987 as well as endorsing the Commission's proposed approach to concluding negotiations with the Faroe Islands.

The Council adopted by qualified majority a compromise package put forward by the presidency on fish guide prices for 1987. This included a reduction of 7 per cent. in the guide price for herring, which will bring the support arrangements more into line with the realities of the market. The Council also formally adopted by qualified majority the regulations on the control measures discussed at the Council on 5 November and the structural measures for the fisherie's sector discussed at the Council on 3 December.

This meeting of the Fisheries Council was the final one under the United Kingdom presidency. In the course of the last six months, agreement has been reached on five major subjects — on revised technical measures for conservation, on very much improved arrangements for control, on a comprehensive programme on structures, on the long-term basis for sharing the North Sea herring stock with Norway, and now on guide prices, total allowable catches and quotas for 1987. The Council has therefore made outstanding progress. In combination with the common fisheries policy settled in 1983, these measures now provide a comprehensive and fully effective basis for the Community's fishermen not just for next year but in most respects for years to come.

Uneviscerated Fish

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will introduce controls over the import of uneviscerated fish of the salmon family; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has today laid before Parliament the Importation of Salmonid Viscera Order 1986, made under the Animal Health Act 1981. This order comes into effect on 1 February 1987 and prohibits imports into Great Britain of uneviscerated dead salmonids and salmonid viscera, except under licence.

The order strengthens our existing controls on imports under the Diseases of Fish Acts 1937 and 1983 to prevent the intoduction of certain serious fish diseases, notably viral haemorrhagic septicaemia and infectious haematopoietic necrosis to our farmed and wild fish stocks.

General licences to permit individual countries to continue exports to Great Britain of salmon and trout "in the round" will be considered only where a country can satisfactorily demonstrate the absence of VHS and IHN from its waters and also operate its own controls on imports of uneviscerated salmonids so as to prevent fish from an unacceptable source entering Great Britain through the "back door".

EEC (Subsidised Foods)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will raise at the next meeting of the management committee the question of seeking an assurance from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics that the subsidised food provided from European Economic Community stockpiles is not used for military purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 16 December 1986, c. 529]: No. Management Committees consider Commission proposals for sales of CAP commodities to be made on terms which are competitive with those being offered by other sellers on the world market. It is already the United Kingdom's policy to oppose any proposed sales which are targeted on one particular country in such a way as to give that country preferential treatment of any kind.

Trent Grain Company

Mr. Ashley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what comments, and when, were made by the business reporting agency used by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce to report on the financial position of the Trent Grain company.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1986, c. 599]: Information provided by the business reporting agency is subject to a contractual condition of confidentiality.

Mr. Ashley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on which dates a stock loss at Trent Grain was (a) suspected and (b) confirmed; and what action was taken after the earlier date to (i) minimise the possibility of further stock losses, (ii) recover the suspected loss and (iii) investigate the financial position of the company.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1986, c. 600]: The possibility of a shortfall of intervention grain stocks at the Uttoxeter store was first suggested by volumetric analysis in August 1985. Thereafter every opportunity was taken to dispose of the grain from this store in order to minimise the risk of further losses and to reduce the stock to a level at which weighing was practicable. In the meantime the company's financial position was monitored, principally through a business reporting agency. The weighing operation began in July 1986 and when completed in October confirmed the existence of a shortfall. Action could not be taken before the loss was confirmed, but the board is now pursuing the recovery of the deficiency.

Mr. Ashley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has obtained a copy of the 1985 annual report of the Trent Grain company.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1986, c. 600]: I understand that the company's 1985 annual report has not yet been submitted to the Registrar of Companies.

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has regarding the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce's investigations into the grain holding of Trent Grain Ltd.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 625]: Investigations have revealed a shortfall in the stock of intervention grain held at the Uttoxeter store and recovery of the deficiency is being pursued.

Potatoes

Mr. Gale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place copies of submissions made by the Federation of Agricultural Co-operatives (UK) Ltd. and the Processed Vegetable Growers Association to the potato review group in the Library.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 625]: Submissions were made, in confidence, by both organisations during the course of our review of potato support arrangements in 1983-84. I think it right that the organisations themselves should decide whether their views should be made public and I suggest my hon. Friend contacts them direct.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, further to his reply of 5 December, Official Report, column 848, to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Dr. Thomas) about radioactivity in sheep, he will state the precise location of the readings of readioactive caesium listed in Cumbria.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 626]: Details of the 15 readings above 3,000 bq/kg (which represent less than 0·05 per cent. of measurements taken) have been given to the farmers whose sheep were tested but it is not our policy to disclose this information to others. The sheep came from upland areas of extensive grazing and their exact location would in any case be difficult to pinpoint accurately.

Milk Production

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the provisional European Economic Community agreement on milk production reached on 16 December places any additional financial responsibility directly on member states; and who will be responsible for the payment of subsidies (i) to buy out milk quotas and (ii) to dispose of existing butter surpluses.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 626]: The Council agreed two measures involving compensation to producers for milk quota cuts. First, it agreed to increase the maximum EC-funded rate of compensation under the existing Community outgoers scheme (which aims to buy up 3 per cent. of quota for cancellation) from 4 to 6 ecu per 100 kg per year for seven years. To the extent that this compensation is not fully spent by a member state, it may be used as direct compensation for compulsory across-the-board quota cuts or to buy up quota for redistribution.

Secondly it was agreed that compensation should be paid for the temporary suspension of quota (4 per cent. from April 1987 and a further 1·5 per cent. from April 1988) at the rate of 10 ecu per 100 kg per year for the next two years. Both of these measures will be fully funded by the Community and member states will pay for them to the extent of their normal budgetary contributions. It should however, be noted that the package of measures on milk agreed by the Council will result in an overall net saving to the Community budget over a number of years and therefore a reduction in member states' contributions.

Both the Community outgoers scheme and the new arrangements for temporary suspension of quota allow member states to top up the level of compensation from national funds. The Government have no plans to make use of these provisions.

The Council took note, with approval, of a Commission paper outlining plans for a two-year stock disposal programme covering 1 million tonnes of butter. The Commission proposes to finance this by deferring the reimbursement to member states of any losses on these sales for two years and then making four equal annual payments borne by the Community budget in the normal way. For the period of deferral interest will be paid to member states on the amounts outstanding. No decision has yet been taken on the detailed arrangements which will be discussed at the future Council.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what surplus production of milk and milk products has been estimated for the European Economic Community in the current year, 1987 1988 and 1989, respectively, in the event of implementation of provisional agreement on the milk sector reached on 16 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 626]: In its interim report on the quota system (document COM (86) 645) the Commission estimated the Community milk surplus for the current year to be about 9·5 million tonnes. The package now agreed by the Council would reduce milk production by that amount over two years. On this basis there would by 1989 be no surplus production of milk. The Commission report does, however, point out that its estimate of the surplus assumes that current levels of subsidised disposals—both on the home market and for export — remains unchanged. Nevertheless, the agreement reached by Ministers does represent a very substantial step forward in removing the surplus in the milk sector.

TRANSPORT

Crash Barriers

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the study of safety barrier criteria for all-purpose dual carriageway roads referred to in his answer to a question by the hon. Member for Suffolk, Central, (Mr. Lord) Official Report, column 503, 2 December.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A copy of the consultants' report "Safety Fence Criteria for All-purpose Dual Carriageway Roads" prepared for the Transport and Road Research Laboratory was placed in the House of Commons Library today. It will be more widely published in due course by the laboratory.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans exist to provide all dual carriageway trunk roads with central reservation crash barriers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On Wednesday 17 December at column 537 I announced that safety fencing will be provided on all new and existing dual carriageway trunk roads where it can be shown that this is justified by the traffic using the particular road.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of dual carriageway trunk roads have central reservation crash barriers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Approximately 10 per cent.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans exist to provide central reservation crash barriers on all motorways; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what percentage of the motorway network in England and Wales includes central reservation crash barriers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since 1971 all new motorways in England have been provided with central reserve safety fencing. Approximately 98 per cent. of existing motorways in England already have these fences.

In view of my decision given in Official Report 17 December 1986 at column 537 to provide central reserve safety fencing on dual carriageways, I am reviewing the traffic flows on motorways without fencing to assess if it can be justified on these roads.

Responsibility for central reserve safety fencing on motorways in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Warminster Bypass

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Transport when an announcement will be made as to the successful contract tender for the Warminster bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The tenders received for this scheme are above the Department's estimate. They are therefore being subjected to a detailed scrutiny. I nevertheless hope it will prove possible to award the contract by the end of the year.

MOT Test Centres

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many garages operating Ministry of Transport test centres have lost their licence to operate in the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: 360 testing stations lost MOT authorisation in this period. The figures are:

	Number
1985	80
1984	107
1983	90
1982	37
1981	46

Authorisation may be withdrawn for substandard testing of vehicles, for a major breach of an examiner's conditions of appointment or because an examiner has received a criminal conviction. Examiners have a right to make representations against withdrawal of authorisation.

M40 Oxford-Birmingham

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport when construction work will start on the section of the M40 between Oxford and Birmingham; and when he anticipates that the M40 will be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Subject to the satisfactory outcome of the remaining statutory procedures, work will start in the summer of 1987. The whole road could be open to traffic in 1990.

Runways (Safety Zones)

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will review the safety aspects of public safety zones adjacent to runways in the light of current developments in aircraft safety; and what is the restriction on employees per acre in new buildings constructed within a public safety zone.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Government policy is that there should be no significant increase in the number of people living, working or congregating within public safety zones. Although the risk of aircraft crash is small, experience has shown it to be greatest in the area covered by these zones. This was confirmed by the most recent review of worldwide accident data prepared by the Civil Aviation Authority in January 1985.

In giving advice to local authorities required to determine planning applications relating to proposed developments within public safety zones, the Civil Aviation Authority (which acts on behalf of the Department in the matter) has regard to all the circumstances of the case which might affect safety, including the increase in the number of people on the ground likely to be put at risk.

Airports (Cargo Throughput)

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the throughput of cargo at (a) Heathrow, (b) other British Airports Authority airports, and (c) Luton international airport in each month from January 1984 to the latest month for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information is provided in the table. Cargo throughput figures for BAA plc airports are available to October 1986; and for Luton international airport to September 1986.

Highway Works (Tendering)

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has yet considered the responses to his Department's consultation document on extending the requirements for competitive tendering for local authority highway works; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: We have now considered the results of the consultation. We have concluded that it is right from 1 April next year to proceed with the proposal to reduce from £50,000 to £25,000 the threshold above which all general highway works in England and Wales must be put out to tender. Regulations to make this change will be laid early in the new year. We are satisfied that it is practicable to make the change by the due date and that the additional competition generated will be beneficial in securing better value for money.

In the consultation document it was also proposed to increase from 30 per cent. to 60 per cent. the proportion by value of works below the new threshold which should have to be put out to tender. We have concluded that it would not be practicable to implement this change as well from April next year. We intend therefore to consider this further in the context of the Government's wider proposals for increasing competition in the provision of local authority services. I shall make a further announcement in due course.

Manchester (Holiday Bus Services)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations the Minister of State, Department of Transport, has received from the chairman of the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority concerning the provision of bus services in the conurbation over the Christmas and new year holiday period; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received a letter from the chairman of Greater Manchester passenger transport authority telling me of difficulties which have been experienced in arranging Christmas and new year services. This is a matter for the passenger transport authority; I notice that other transport authorities seem to have been more successful in arranging some basic services over the holiday period.

Public Service Vehicles (Test)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of vehicles that failed the annual public service vehicle test in 1985-86, in Wales, by operator group.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 508]: The information for Wales is as follows:

1985-86 Wales

Operator group	Total number of tests	Number of initial failures	Initial failure rate per cent.
NBC	1,349	339	25·1
Local Authority	560	203	36·2
Private	2,922	1,387	47·5
Total	4,831	1,929	39·9

If vehicles which passed after minor repairs were carried out at the testing stations are excluded, the number which failed the test is as follows:

	Number of final failures	Final failure rate per cent.
NBC	66	4·9
Local Authority	60	10·7
Private	861	29·5
Total	987	20·4

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of vehicles that failed the annual public service vehicle test in 1985-86, in Great Britain, by operator group.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 508]: The information for Great Britain is as follows:

1985-86 Great Britain

Operator Group	Total Number of Tests	Number of Initial Failures	Initial Failure Rate per cent.
NBC	14,973	5,543	37·0

If vehicles which passed after minor repairs were carried out at the testing stations are excluded the number which failed the test is as follows:

	Number of Final Failures	Final Failure Rate per cent.
NBC	1,477	9·9
PTE	1,222	12·5
Local Authority	497	9·5
SGB	882	25·6

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report, by operator group for 1985-86, separately distinguishing between Great Britain and Wales, the number and percentage of tests which resulted in immediate prohibition of annual public service vehicles tests.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 508]: The figures for each operator group and Wales as a whole are not readily available, but the overall figures for Great Britain and for vehicle inspectorate districts covering approximately the south Wales traffic area are:

	Number of Tests	Number of Prohibitions Issued
Great Britain	69,334	287 (0·41 per cent.)
South Wales	3,655	17 (0·46 per cent.)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report for 1985-86, separately distinguishing between Great Britain and Wales, the results of spot checking of public service vehicles and the immediate prohibition rates.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986 c. 508]: Separate information on spot checks is not readily available for Wales as a whole. The information for Great Britain and for vehicle inspectorate districts covering approximately the south Wales traffic area is:

PSV Spot Checks Great Britain South Wales—1985-86

Number of spot checks	Number of spot checks as a percentage of the total PSV annual tests Per cent.	Number of prohibitions issued at spot checks	Number of prohibitions issued as a per cent of vehicles spot checked Per cent.
12,575	18	652	5·28
961	27	33	3·4

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report for the south Wales traffic area for 1985-86 the number of vehicle examiners employed by his Department, together with the number of public service vehicles and goods vehicles for which they are responsible.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 508]: The information is as follows:

Vehicle Inspectorate districts covering approximately the South Wales Traffice Area—1985-86

	Number
Vehicle Examiners in post	23
Public Service Vehicles	3,655
Heavy Goods Vehicles	27,568

The vehicle number data have been extracted from the annual testing statistics and do not therefore include vehicles under one year old.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report, by operator group, the numbers of public service vehicles which (a) failed the annual test for each traffic area in Great Britain for 1985-86, and (b) failed the annual test for each traffic area in Great Britain after rectification of minor faults for 1985-86.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 508]: The information is shown in the table.

It should be noted that the reorganisation of the vehicle inspectorate together with the reduction in the number of traffic areas means that the 1985-86 statistics have been produced on a different basis from previous years. Therefore comparisons with figures produced for previous years may be misleading.

The figures suggest that overall there has been little change in 1985-86 in the percentage of vehicles that failed the annual test after rectification of minor faults, compared with 1984-85.

The figures in brackets express the number of initial failures, passes after rectification and final failures as a percentage of the total tests.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report, by operator group, the numbers of public service vehicles which failed the annual test for the South Wales traffic area in 1985-86.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 508]: The information for the South Wales traffic area is shown below.

The figures show that when compared to the previous year, the initial failure rates for each operator have decreased slightly; there have been no sigificant changes in the final failure rates.

Vehicle Inspectorate Districts roughly equivalent to the South Wales Traffic Area 1985-86

Drink-Driving

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation stipulating a legal alcoholic limit of 20mg/100ml for all drivers under 20-years-old, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 15 December 1986]: No. With more than half of all drinking and driving offenders convicted at around twice the current legal limit, we must concentrate on achieving satisfactory compliance with the law as it stands.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 107

SESSION 1986-87

8th December—19th December 1986

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
